Rationing of new passenger automobiles from supplies to be restricted to approximately 650,000 vehicles, will go into effect February 2, the Office of Price Administration announced yesterday as the president of the National Automobile Dealers Association declared "great headway" is being made on plans for softening the blow for 44,000 businessmen who formerly sold the country four million cars a year.

L. Clare Cargile, president of the association, gave the House Small Business Committee details of a "relief" program worked out in negotiation with Price Administrator Leon Henderson, and intended, if possible, to save automobile dealers from economic death.

"I believe we have made great headway," Cargile later told reporters. "But we have a long way to go to keep our heads above water."

Eligible Buyers Listed

Under the compulsion of transforming automobile plants into munitions factories, it has been determined, Henderson disclosed, to restrict sales of new cars to categories of "eligible" buyers, including the following:

1. Physicians, surgeons, visiting nurses and farm veterinarians.

2. Firemen, law enforcement officers responsible for safeguarding public health and safety and mail carriers.

3. Persons who had purchased, as of January 2, new cars then in dealers' hands, but who had not been able to get delivery on that date."

The same local boards now set up in every county in the country for handling the tire-rationing system will carry out auto rationing on a plan similar to that developed for tire distribution, Henderson said.

Buyer Must Obtain Certificate

Buyers in these categories will be required to obtain certificates from local rationing boards before buying cars, but their purchases may be made through dealers, a move to give some relief to automobile agencies whose stocks of new cars have been "frozen" since January and must remain on their floors until rationing is started.

Henderson's office disclosed, meanwhile, that facilities of auto dealers will be utilized as storage space for an estimated 130,000 cars under a "stockpile" plan. The plan will cover those cars to be shipped by manufacturers after today under the 204,000 auto-production quota

See AUTOS, Page 5, Column 6.

Commissioners Provide for Use Of Auto Tax Seal

The Commissioners yesterday approved amendment to District traffic regulations providing for use of new $3 Federal "auto privilege" tax stamps on the windshields of locally registered passenger cars.

All cars are scheduled to bear the new "privilege" stamps after February 1. Purchased at local postoffices, the stamps will cost $2.00 for the balance of the fiscal year and $3 thereafter.

Sale of the stamps was to have begun today in the postoffices here, but has been postponed for several days, District Postmaster Vincent C. Burke, said last night.

To Follow LaGuardia?

Tired by Work and Tiffs, Will First Lady Quit OCD?

Will Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt follow the lead of her "boss," Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, and give up her job as Assistant Director of Civilian Defense as soon as she reaches a good "stopping place?"

She looks more tired than Mayor LaGuardia did yesterday when he announced he would retire from the OCD directorship as soon as Congress provides money for defense equipment—as he could then consider completed his job of setting up the OCD protective services.

MRS. ROOSEVELT
As She Testified On Civilian Morale

Mrs. Roosevelt has been particularly interested in two phases of OCD work, she told the Tolan committee yesterday: the community planning division and the research and information division, both initiated by her efforts and both ready to function as soon as directors can be found for them.

The community planning division probably will be put directly under Dean James Landis, new OCD executive, the First Lady told the committee. Paul Kellogg, New York sociologist, who worked with Mrs. Roosevelt and a committee of volunteers to get the unit started, will not be available to head it, it was declared at OCD last night. Nor will Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, be able to head the research and information unit—as had been hoped at OCD—since he is on the new Labor Board.

But when the units are headed up, Mrs. Roosevelt will be at a good "stopping place"—if she cares to retire to her former civilian-First Lady status.

Many believe she could do more for civilian defense outside an official office than she could inside, and certainly her life has become even more complex since she

Nelson Studies Big Shake-up To Speed Arms

'Just One Job to Do,' He Says; Necessary Changes Will Be Made

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Donald M. Nelson, about to be appointed czar of the war production program, prepared yesterday to undertake the huge job of matching military requirements against America's productive facilities, and served notice that his first step may be a major administrative and personnel shake-up in the OPM.

It was surmised that the beginning of the changes might be in the designation of William S. Knudsen, now director general of OPM, as the Government's ace technical production expert, in the role of inspector general of the process of turning out munitions of war.

Report He'd Quit Is Denied

This move, designed to make better use of the man generally conceded to the country's top production genius, is said to be the preference of Knudsen himself, who feels he is more competent and more at home with a blueprint or in a factory, rather than as administrative head of a nonproduction job.

Reports that Knudsen would resign were vigorously denied yesterday by sources close to the former General Motors president. It is further reported that Nelson is particularly eager to have Knudsen serve as technical production chief.

Nelson, who President Roosevelt said Tuesday night was about to receive "final" authority in the entire field of war production and procurement, hinted of an impending housecleaning of the war defense agencies yesterday in his first public statement since the news of his designation as war-program czar.

"Just One Job to Do"

In identical letters to Knudsen, Undersecretary of War Patterson and Undersecretary of Navy Forrestal, Nelson wrote:

"We have just one job to do—to make enough war material to lick Hitler and the Japs, and to do it in the shortest possible

Foes of Moving U. S. Agencies Give Up Fight

Vote on Resolution Spells Defeat for Bloc in Senate

By Charles Mercer
Post Staff Writer

Decentralization foes in the Senate late yesterday ceased their fight to hold Federal bureaus in Washington after Administration forces rallied to vote down, 48 to 36, a resolution designed to place in the hands of Congress information on the Government's removal plans.

Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Senate District Committee, and Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, who led the forces opposing decentralization through four hours of floor debate, indicated they would not press their views further.

By its action the Senate virtually breached the last barrier of opposition to what is expected to be a widespread decentralization of old-line agencies. Already 12 bureaus, with a total of some 10,000 employes, have been ordered moved to other cities. Others probably will go in order to make available office and housing space for approximately 40,000 defense workers expected to come to Washington within the next six months.

Budget Bureau Attacked

Yesterday's vote was on a substitute resolution by Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, which would have requested Budget Bureau Director Harold Smith to submit to the Senate District Committee full information on the reasons for removal of agencies and the investigations carried out by the Budget Bureau.

Senator Danaher's resolution was accepted in substitution for a resolution by Senator McCarran, which was more far-reaching in its demands.

The District Committee chairman told the Senate that his committee had vainly requested Smith to appear with the executive order from the President ordering the decentralization of the dozen agencies.

"All kinds of pressure is being put on the unfortunate employes of the Government," declared Senator Mc-

Mistrial Sought Four Times

Jury Decides Hill's Fate Today; No Defense Given by Fish Aide

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Twelve jurors will decide today whether George Hill, 45, swore to "lies put in his mouth by the Nazi Gestapo," or is a "little fellow persecuted because he is Representative Hamilton Fish's secretary."

Hill has been on trial in the District Court since last Wednesday, charged with committing perjury twice before the special grand jury on Axis agents. His plea for a directed verdict of acquittal was refused yesterday by Justice F. Dickinson Letts.

Without even hearing the argument of Special Prosecutor Edward J. Hickey, jr., Justice Letts ruled that the Department of Justice propaganda squad had presented a case that required an answer. The jurors filed into their box to hear what Hill had to offer in his defense.

Then Hill's lawyer, former Representative John O'Connor, said abruptly that there would be no defense. So Hill did not take the witness stand. Nor did O'Connor call any of the "scores of witnesses" he had said would appear for Hill, not even Representative Fish, whose comment on Hill's indictment was: "I will say that Hill is 100 per cent o. k., and I'll back Hill to the limit on anything."

After some hours of debate over what Justice Letts will tell the

Dutch, American Aviators Bomb Total of Three Enemy Vessels

By the Associated Press

Batavia, Netherlands East Indies, Jan. 14.—Dutch troops successfully engaged the Japanese invader today in a skirmish on the wild and mountainous frontier between Sarawak and Dutch Borneo, and Allied planes beat strongly at the enemy from the waters of the Celebes Sea northward to the lower Philippines.

On the already smashed and blackened waterfront area of Tarakan off northeast Borneo—the Japanese-occupied oil-producing island to which the Dutch had applied the torch and hammer before yielding it to the enemy—Dutch bombers descended in force and squarely hit at least one Japanese ship.

(The United States War Department announced that American Army bombers also had participated in attacks against a Japanese naval force in the Tarakan area and that while unfavorable weather made it impossible to determine the full results of this raid it was known that two enemy lighters were destroyed.)

Other Dutch airmen ranged far to the north to the southern Philippine Islands, the Japanese base for the Indies invasion, and bombed runways of a Japanese air field and scored three direct hits on barracks.

New Invasion Thrust Awaited

(An International News Service dispatch said the London Daily Express reported from Batavia that a large Japanese fleet, consisting of six cruisers, six torpedo boats and 14 troop transports had begun steaming south from captured Tarakan Island, under repeated attacks by American and Netherlands bombers, apparently headed for Balik Papan.

(The dispatch said a new Japanese landing assault in force was "likely" at Balik Papan, situated on the east coast of Borneo island and the vital seaport outlet for the products of Borneo's largest oil fields which produce 1,179,000 tons of petroleum annually. Balik Papan, which was bombed heavily but without appreciable damage by Japanese planes Wednesday, is 300 miles south of Tarakan down the Macassar Strait.)

Hand-to-Hand Fighting

Unsuccessful enemy air raids on the Rhio Archipelago also were reported.

The arrival in these islands of the Allied commander in chief of the Southwest Pacific, British Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell was announced today.

Wavell's headquarters will be somewhere in the Indies. His second

Searchlight Drills To Begin Soon In Capital Area

Nightly searchlight drills, in which Army and Navy planes will test the effectiveness of military searchlight units, will begin "soon" in the Washington metropolitan area, Defense Coordinator John Russell Young said last night.

"They will be friendly lights and friendly planes," Young added in admonishing citizens "not to be alarmed."

He said the tests will be held at varying hours of the night and that advance information on the drills was being released in order to avoid public alarm.

Axis Steps Up Malta Assault

Cairo, Jan. 14 (AP).—Axis aerial activity in the Mediterranean zone was stepped up tonight with raids centered on Malta, the fortified British island which has been the chief bar to reinforcement of the German-Italian Libyan army and for days has been braced against the prospect of invasion.

The Royal Air Force was similarly busy with assaults on the Italian island of Sicily, base of much Axis Mediterranean air power, and on Tripoli, the westernmost Axis center of Libya.

Moving Closer

By the Associated Press

Singapore, Jan. 14.—Imperial troops established a shorter Malayan defense line northwest of this island fortress tonight and authorities disclosed that only one remaining federated state, neighboring Johore, remained under effective British control.

The new British line was formed in a drenching rain storm. Presumably it was in lower Negri Sembilan state and the adjoining straits settlement of Malacca. Both these states border on Johore.

Two days ago the British troops had held a temporary line above Seremban, the capital of Negri Sembilan, 150 miles from Singapore, but again they withdrew southward before superior Japanese forces.

(A Tokyo broadcast said the Japanese troops were fighting the British along the Malacca border, and that British troops farther inland were withdrawing from Negri Sembilan into Johore state at Gemas, 110 miles above Singapore.

Populace Aware of Gravity

(This action was on the western side of the peninsula. On the eastern side the Japanese claimed they were in firm control of Pahang state down to the Johore frontier, some 90 miles above Singapore.)

The British revelation that Johore was the last of nine states not occupied or penetrated by the Japanese came through a postal order which said mail was being accepted only for distribution in Johore. The mainland state is separated from Singapore by a mile-wide strait.

This order did much to awaken Singapore's mixed population to the gravity of their situation. After less than six weeks of war they now realize that only about one-fifth of federated territory and one-fourth of its population remains under the British flag.

Some residents here still were wasting postage on letters addressed to points in Japanese hands.

Increasingly heavy Japanese air raids, however, brought home to most of the Asiatics here the impending battle for Singapore. The ministry of information said yesterday's Japanese raid resulted in 55

19 Firemen Hurt As Blasts Wreck Oil Warehouse

Claymont, Del., Jan. 14 (AP).—Nineteen firemen were injured, two seriously, today as flames and two terrific explosions wrecked a crude oil warehouse and the Delaware River Pier of the Texas Oil Company.

A company spokesman estimated the damage at $200,000. A welder said the blaze started when a spark from his torch ignited oil-soaked flooring.

Endangered by exploding oil drums, firemen from six nearby communities and 200 company employes worked two hours to bring the fire under control.

Hostages and Death

Japs Ape Nazi System Of Terrorizing Conquered

Japanese military authorities in the Philippines have decreed the death penalty for anyone who attacks a Japanese soldier or civilian or otherwise interferes with their forces in the islands.

These extreme repressive measures, patterned after the Nazi practice in occupied Europe, include the warning that if the person attacking a Japanese escapes, ten "influential persons" in the community will be seized as hostages.

The Japanese decree was disclosed in last night's War Department communique. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, commander of America's Philippine Army, radioed the text of the proclamation as published in Manila newspapers over the signature of Japan's army of occupation.

"Anyone who inflicts or attempts to inflict an injury upon Japanese soldiers or individuals shall be shot to death," this order decreed.

"If the assailant, or attempted assailant, cannot be found, we will hold ten influential persons as hostages who live in or about the street or municipality where the event has happened."

In addition, the War Department communique stated that a radio announcement from Tokyo was made which stated that Japanese military authorities in Manila had decreed the death penalty for a number of other acts.

Death was prescribed for such acts as disturbing the peace, damage to military property, violation of military orders, interference with communications, concealment of requisitioned goods and circulation of rumors concerning the Japanese forces.

Following is the text of War Department Communique No. 59, issued at 5 p. m., which quotes the decree: (War Department Communique No. 58, issued yesterday morning appears elsewhere in this edition.)

New Red Gain Further Perils Nazi Salient

Russians Draw Noose Tighter Around Mozhaisk

By the Associated Press

London (Thursday), Jan. 15.—Continuing westward advances by the Red army, steadily drawing tighter the noose about the Germans in the strongly held salient of Mozhaisk, 57 miles west of Moscow, were announced today by the Soviet information bureau in Moscow.

Among a number of villages recaptured Wednesday was Medyn, 33 miles south and slightly west of Mozhaisk, the communique said.

Thus the Red command quickly confirmed the opinion of informed Russian sources here, who said Tuesday's breaking of the last German positional zone before Mozhaisk had cleared the whole of the bleak and icy battlefield for a Red army war of movement.

Peril to Nazis Increases

This positional zone, at Dorokohovo, athwart the Moscow-Mozhaisk highway east of Mozhaisk, had stood for nearly six weeks in the face of the steady pressure of the Russian counteroffensive, protecting some 100,000 Germans in the Mozhaisk area.

The situation of these Germans has become an increasingly menaced salient with deep Russian thrusts to the south and north of Mozhaisk.

Recapture of the Dorokohovo position broke a front which had extended across the Mozhaisk highway to Kubinka, and it laid the Nazi positions crowded one on another in Mozhaisk open to attack by this route as well as frontally,

Japs Thrown Back Twice More in Luzon

Enemy Losses Run Heavy, But American Casualties Are Small

Japanese forces, decisively whipped in their first all-out assault on Gen. Douglas MacArthur's defense lines in Bataan, have returned to the attack twice but were beaten back both times with heavy losses, the War Department disclosed yesterday.

A communique also confirmed reports by the Dutch that American bombers are cooperating in the defense of the Netherlands East Indies.

Three American planes, presumably Boeing or Consolidated four-engined bombers, joined with the Dutch in an attack on Japanese naval forces attempting a landing in the Tarakan region of Borneo, it was announced.

2 Enemy Craft Destroyed

"Unfavorable weather conditions," the communique said, "made it difficult to determine the results of the attack. However, it is known that two enemy lighters were destroyed."

The Americans returned to their base undamaged after the attack, it added.

Reports from Mindanao and Jolo, two of the southernmost islands of the Philippines, the communique went on, indicate that the Japanese are establishing advance bases on the islands from which to support attacks on Malaya and the Dutch Indies.

The two new attacks on MacArthur's lines in Luzon, the War Department said, were "determined" assaults which "were in the nature of reconnaissance in force." They were made Tuesday.

The two attacks "were well supported" by artillery and aircraft,

Notable Feat of Seamanship

Hart Puts Entire Asiatic Fleet In Position for War on Japan

By Sterling F. Green
Associated Press Staff Writer

Admiral Thomas C. Hart has succeeded in bringing the entire Asiatic Fleet, with its warships intact, to comparatively secure waters from which to wage his fight against the Japanese, it was ascertained last night.

Belief spread here that the feat of seamanship involved in evacuating the naval base at Cavite, in Manila Bay only 30 miles from the Philippine capital, would one day be ranked one of the notable naval episodes of the war.

The Navy's sole comment has been the laconic communique, issued immediately after the fall of Manila, that "all ships and naval personnel were removed from the Manila-Cavite area prior to enemy occupation," along with all records, equipment and stores, and that industrial facilities were destroyed.

Not only was the whole combat force—cruisers, destroyers and submarines—removed from the untenable base at Cavite, but also the "fleet train." The "train" was the slow-moving collection of supply ships, tankers, cargo vessels, tugs, tenders, repair ships and other auxiliaries essential to the fleet.

There were indications that the Michigan-born admiral, a seasoned submarine and cruiser division com-

Some Survivors Rescued; U-Boats 'Up and Down' Shore, Navy Says

An enemy submarine torpedoed the Panama-registered tanker Norness early yesterday 60 miles south of Montauk Point, Long Island.

The attack was the closest approach yet made to America's East Coast by enemy warcraft since the United States entered the war.

Its announcement followed by a few hours the Navy disclosure that enemy submarines are operating "all up and down the Atlantic Coast."

Survivors Rescued

The first announcement of the sinking, issued by the Third Naval District at New York, merely said:

"The tanker Norness, Panama City, was torpedoed early this morning about 60 miles southeast of Montauk Point.

"Naval craft from New London and Newport, R. I., were dispatched to the rescue of survivors.

"It is known that a number of survivors have been rescued."

Fourteen survivors were landed at the Newport Naval Torpedo Station late last night.

They were brought in by the destroyer U. S. S. Ellison, according to Capt. Frank H. Roberts, and were held incommunicado at the station hospital.

Eight survivors, including Capt. Harald Hansen, were landed at New Bedford Mass. Oother survivors were being taken to New London, Conn.

Erling D. Naess, president of the Tanker Corporation, owner of the vessel, said at his home, in Short Hills, N. J., late last night that there were 41 men aboard the ship, including Capt. Hansen, a Norwegian.

All members of the crew were Scandinavians, mostly Norwegian, he said.

Naess said that he was not at liberty to give details as to the Potomac Is Closed To Night Traffic

Another wartime restriction was clamped down on Washington yesterday with the barring of all commercial and pleasure craft from the Potomac River and its tributaries at any point above Jones Point Light—the southern tip of Alexandria—between dusk and dawn.

Coast Guard officials said boats must have express permission to enter the zone from the captain of the port of Washington.

The restricted zone affects the Washington harbor, Alexandria, the Anacostia River and Washington Channel.

Residents Crowd Honolulu Walks In Raid Alarm

Honolulu, Jan. 14 (AP).—An air-raid alarm at 11:42 a. m. (5:12 Eastern standard time) today alerted the island of Oahu; but the all-clear signal sounded four minutes later.

The entire island sprang into action as the sirens wailed and Army fighter planes climbed steeply into the skies and streaked out to sea. Residents took to the sidewalks to see the aerial show.

600 Japs Die In Battle Near Canton

By the United Press

Chungking, Jan. 14.—A government communique said tonight that 600 Japanese were killed in fierce fighting near Canton, where China's forces are threatening Japanese lines to Malaya and that "hundreds" of others were drowned when remnants of the ill-starred expedition to Changsha sought to escape across the Milo River.

The Chinese are putting up stiff resistance to a three-columned Japanese offensive from Canton, the communique said, and are counter-attacking at Tsengcheng, 50 miles east of the South China metropolis.

In addition, Chinese units have cut the railroad running from Canton to the Kowloon Peninsula facing occupied Hongkong in two places. The battle with 600 Japanese casualties occurred at Lopao, 10 miles north of Samshui, and about 30 miles northwest of Canton.

ship's itinerary.

The Navy announcement did not identify the nationality of the submerged attacker, nor did it say whether the damaged tanker, en route from Panama City, had gone to the bottom.

The position of the oil carrier, 60 miles south of Montauk Point, which is at the eastern tip of Long Island, about 120 miles from New York City, would place it approximately 110 miles due east of New York Harbor.

The Norness was listed in Lloyd's Register of Shipping as a vessel of 8577 gross tons, owned by the Tanker Corporation and sailing under Panamanian registration.

Before 1939, the Norness flew the flag of Norway and traded between Liverpool, Trinidad and Key West, Fla.

Earlier in the day, reports from Washington said that a Navy patrol plane had spotted the stricken vessel, her decks awash and her crew bobbing up and down in lifeboats on the wintry North Atlantic.

The original position was given as about 60 miles south of Block Island, R. I., a position that would place the vessel only a few miles north of the spot the Navy officially designated as the place of her attack.

The patrol plane's alarm sent naval aircraft speedily to the rescue of survivors—and presumably on a death hunt with depth bombs marked for the skulking submersible.

For hours after the wave-tossed tanker crewmen first were seen, however, there remained some doubt as to the manner in which their craft was damaged—the possibility that it may have been a matter of elements remaining until official announcement was made that a torpedo had done its lethal work.

The attack on the tanker followed the torpedoing Tuesday of a large armed steamship 160 miles off Nova Scotia with a loss of perhaps 90 lives and was reported simultaneously with a Navy Department warning that the U-boat menace to the Atlantic Coast was on the increase.

How large the enemy submarine fleet is believed to be or what steps are being taken to combat were not disclosed. Vessels of the Atlantic Fleet and inshore patrol craft and planes, however, are believed to be scouring the coastal waters for the prowling subs.

"The submarine menace along the Atlantic coast is becoming increasingly serious," the Navy spokesman said. "Merchant ships have been warned accordingly."

Asked where the Axis submarines were prowling, the Navy spokesman said:

"Pretty well up and down the East Coast."

The enemy craft are believed to be German submersibles which preyed on shipping in the North Atlantic until bad weather and American patrols made their prowling unprofitable. There had been reports they were transferred to the Mediterranean when the attacks ceased, but now it appears they have come into American coastal waters.

This is the first appearance of hostile submarines off the East Coast since 1918, when German U-boats on several occasions shelled and torpedoed coastal shipping. Japanese subs attacked Pacific Coast shipping, however, earlier in the war. They left the West Coast after at least one was destroyed.

Tarakan Fall Laid to Huge Numbers of Foe

By the Associated Press

Batavia, Netherlands East Indies, Jan. 14.—The heroic last stand of the Tarakan garrison, which fought even after being completely surrounded by Japanese, under heavy air bombardment and in the midst of enormous heat and fire from burning oil wells, was told by authoritative quarters today.

Ony a small part of the garrison escaped alive, after the island had been overrun by Japanese who landed from an armada of 15 transports, 6 heavy cruisers, 6 destroyers and other vessels, it was said.

This authoritative account of the battle, the first to come from the small oil-bearing island off northeast Borneo, was made available through Aneta, Netherlands Indies news agency:

"After the Japanese for some time, at regular intervals, had carried out air attacks on Tarakan, it became clear in the middle of last week that they aimed to capture the island.

"On the morning of January 8 the Japanese raided the place and were greeted with a heavy antiaircraft barrage. One of their planes was hit and crashed and the entire crew lost their lives. The few remaining bombers attacked a ship of the Royal Netherland Navy lying off Tarakan without doing any damage.

"On Friday, January 9, two attacks were carried out by eight bombers which also did not succeed in damaging the Netherlands warship appreciably. Some bombs which landed close to the ship wounded some members of the crew.

"At about noon on Friday a large fleet was observed 15 miles east of the southernmost point of the island of Tarakan—which point is called Tandjoeng Batoe. This fleet consisted of six heavy cruisers, six destroyers, various transport ships and one tanker.

"At about five o'clock in the afternon, 15 transport ships, protected by Japanese naval vessels, approached the southernmost point of the island.

"Naturally, this enemy fleet was not left unmolested, and bombers of the Netherlands Indies Army Air Force attacked the transports and scored several successes. Two direct hits were scored on transport ships and a near miss was scored on a heavy cruiser, while no fewer than three enemy planes were shot down by Netherland Indies aircraft.

"Meanwhile, it appeared that at the same time preparations were made to land troops in the neighborhood of Amal, on the east coast of the island.

"In the early morning of Sunday, the Japanese began to land troops at Tandjieng Batoe and Amal. In the afternoon the situation had become such that our troops had formed a front south and east of the town of Tarakan.

"The protective garrison at Amal had to withdraw after having inflicted heavy losses on the enemy, after which the Japanese began to advance toward the oil fields and attacked.

"Originally the Japanese succeeded in breaking through, but by throwing in reserves our troops succeeded in throwing back the enemy so that on Sunday night the entire front was recovered and the defense formed one uninterrupted line in a half-circle around Tarakan.

"The Japanese continously poured in new troops and succeeded in breaking through our lines on Monday.

"Meanwhile, when it had become clear that the Japanese would drive with superior forces, orders had been given to destroy the oil wells, tanks, pumps, remaining oil stocks of the island and everything which might be valuable to the enemy. This all occurred according to plans prepared long before. The destruction was already completed on Sunday morning.

"On Monday, the Japanese, after a hard battle with heavy losses on both sides, had advanced so far that they had surrounded the remaining Netherland Indies forces which were fighting at several points.

"Under heavy air bombardment and under the enormous heat of the burning oil, the Tarakan garrison was overrun. A small part of the garrison succeeded in escaping to the mainland of Borneo.

"The object—preventing a single drop of oil from falling into enemy hands—had been accomplished despite the heavy odds and great efforts on the part of the enemy. The garrison of Tarakan fully did its duty.

"In the meantime, the army air force continued raiding the Japanese ships, and several successes have been scored. No fewer than four transport ships received direct hits."

If the German command is forced to withdraw these Mozhaisk divisions too rapidly there will most certainly be a dangerous scramble westward, for the whole area is wedged between the Russian pincers which approach Rzhev on the north and the main Bryansk-Smolensk railway on the south.

The southern arm of this pincers is reported ramming across frozen country on a 40-mile-wide front and new reserves are being rushed into action.

The Dorokohovo victory was announced early Wednesday along with recapture of Kirov, 150 miles southwest of Moscow, in the Smolensk district from which the Red armies withdrew last October. Kirov is a rail junction about 85 miles southeast of Smolensk.

Surprise Maneuver

Obviously the operation by which it was taken was a surprise maneuver. An official account of the capture said that the Red armies, after taking Mosalsk at the base of the present German Mozhaisk salient, advanced several dozen miles in several days in a southwesterly direction, overpowering German attempts to dig in on consecutive lines of defense and wiping out group after group of German automatic riflemen.

Suddenly, Soviet troops appeared at the approaches of Kirov and stormed into the town, reducing German positions in houses and cellars in brief but desperate street fighting which left roadways littered with bodies.

Remnants of the German garrison managed to escape to the west after firing parts of Kirov, but the Russian troops put out the fires.

As a result of this achievement, the Russian line on the Central Front now runs from just north of Orel sharply northwest to Kirov, thence northeast to Mosalsk, east and around Mozhaisk, then dipping west to the vicinity of Gzhatsk, thence north to a point near Rzhev.

In the Donets Basin, an Izvestia correspondent reported the destruction of more than 20,000 German troops in fighting which had taken the Russians within 12 miles of Kharkov, second city of the Ukraine.

In the north, new Soviet thrusts below Lake Ilmen, intended to trap at least part of the German armies on the Leningrad front, have made progress and Staraya Russa, 10 miles south of the lake, is unofficially reported to be in Russian hands.

Above Lake Ilmen, Gen. Meretzkov's troops are shoving the Germans down the Volkhov River Valley.

Reds Make New Landings in Crimea

London (Thursday), Jan. 15 (U.P.).—The Red army was reported today to have made a landing from the Sea of Azov west of Taganrog, from which Axis occupation forces were fleeing under a destructive artillery fire.

Newspapers here quoted Vichy reports of violent fighting at Bojkosak, ten miles south of Perekop, the town astride the narrow isthmus of the same name which links Crimea with the Russian mainland. Thus the Red army seemed to be about to block the only exit of the 100,000 Axis troops from the big Black Sea peninsula.

The landing west of Taganrog, 40 miles west of Rostov, was made with Russian Black Sea fleet support. Assailed from two sides, the Axis troops in the town fled. There had been indications that the Russians had progressed beyond Taganrog in the westward push from Rostov, which started the great offensive.

The initiative in Crimea appeared to be firmly in Russian hands. Several more landings were made on the northeastern coast, including one near the Perekop Isthmus, gateway to the Black Sea peninsula.

Parachute troops and cavalry were taking part in the Red Army sweep through Crimea, and already were threatening the capital city of Simferopol from the northeast.

The Russian contingent landed at Feodosiya on the neck of the Kerch Peninsula were said to have captured Kolai, 60 miles northwest on the railroad near its junction with the Simferopol line.

mander, had moved fighting units out of vulnerable Cavite before the Japanese assault on Pearl Harbor and Luzon Island opened hostilities. After the outbreak of hostilities some of the warcraft had to reenter Manila Bay, it was said, to escort auxiliary vessels to safety.

Probably in Indies

Where the fleet is now located, or whether it has found a new base, are questions which the Navy does not answer.

That it probably is in the Netherlands East Indies area was indicated by the recent arrival of Admiral Hart, officially confirmed, somewhere in that archipelago. A Navy spokesman previously had said it could be "assumed" that the Asiatic fleet was cooperating with Dutch and British units in Far Eastern waters.

Axis Planes Batter Malta, Foe's Lines

Aerial Assaults Menace Imperials' Libyan Drive

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Jan. 14.—A vast Axis air assault in the Mediterranean appeared to be well under way tonight as German and Italian planes battered unceasingly at the British island of Malta, bombed British communications across Libya, and attacked imperial troops attempting to encircle Gen. Erwin Rommel's tank army.

British planes also were increasingly active, and the future of the Battle of Libya appeared to hinge more and more on Malta's ability to stand up under repeated Axis air attacks.

The small but mighty island fortress is but 50 miles from Italian Sicily on a direct line with Tripoli, main African base for feeding Gen. Rommel's troops now drawn up on a 60-mile line between El Agheila and Marada at the gateway to Tripolitania.

The island has undergone more than 1200 air raid alarms since Italy entered the war, and its defenders claim a total bag of at least 80 Axis planes.

Evidence that the R. A. F. still was firmly entrenched at Malta came in tonight's communique announcing British attacks on Catania, Sicily and Tripoli.

The Libyan battle was an acute supply problem for both sides. The British were dependent largely on sea-borne supplies from Alexandria routed to the Libyan ports of Tobruk and Derna. So the German air force bombed those ports relentlessly, presumably from bases in Crete.

The R. A. F. similarly hammered the Axis port of Tripoli from Malta, and also ships trying to dash across the narrow stretch.

The British also acknowledged that Axis planes were stepping up their activities at El Agheila to protect Rommel's troops entrenched in hills.

"It will be a very, very difficult job trying to outflank the new Axis line," a military source conceded.

The R. A. F. dumped heavy explosives on trucks and supply depots at El Agheila, and machine-gunned ground troops.

The imperial ground troops reported slight progress against the rearguards which Gen. Rommel posted to enable his main forces to dig in on the El Agheila-Marada line.

it was said. In contrast to the "heavy losses" suffered by the Japanese, American and Philippine casualties were "comparatively small," MacArthur reported.

Again the enemy confined his air operations to the support of ground troops, and did not renew last week's heavy bombing assaults on Corregidor and the other Manila Bay fortresses.

The advonce bases reported seized by the Japs in Mindanao and Jolo are believed here to be air fields and protected fleet anchorages. They are probably at Davao, principal town on Mindanao and at the town of Jolo on the northern coast of Jolo Island.

Following is the text of War Department Communique No. 58, issued at 9:30 a. m. (War Department Communique No. 59 is published elsewhere in the paper):

"1. Philippine Theater: The enemy yesterday made two determined attacks which were in the nature of reconnaissances in force. These attacks were well supported by artillery and aircraft. Both were repulsed by our troops, with the Japanese suffering heavy losses. American and Philippine casualties were comparatively small.

"Hostile air operations were confined to support of ground troops. No attacks were made on our fortifications.

"Reports received from Mindanao and Jolo indicate that the Japanese are establishing advance bases in these islands from which to support attacks on Malaya and the Netherlands Indies.

"2. Netherlands Indies: Three American bombing planes, cooperating with the forces of the Netherlands Indies, attacked a Japanese naval force engaged in landing operations in the Tarakan area of Borneo. Unfavorable weather conditions made it difficult to determine the results of the attack. However, it is known that two enemy lighters were destroyed. Our planes returned to their base undamaged.

"3. There is nothing to report from other areas."

Fresh Men Aid British In Burma

By the Associated Press

Rangoon, Jan. 14.—Both air and land reinforcements—the first to reach the British Far East in more than a month of war with Japan—have arrived in all-important Burma. More are on the way.

An official announcement said today that these included antiaircraft batteries for Rangoon and other key points and additional ground crews for air units landed at Burmese air fields, some of which are hidden in the jungle close to Thailand, springboard for Japan's drive on Singapore.

(The wording of this dispatch may indicate that aircraft and aviation personnel, apart from those making up the ground crews, have arrived. The British have announced they do not intend to disclose movements of aircraft and this might apply likewise to fliers.

(Burma's air strength already appears to be the greatest of any British Far East possession. Some of the heaviest raids on Thailand have been made from there. It is known to have received aerial reinforcements shortly before the war began.)

Fresh British and Indian troops, equipped for instant action under the Burma commander, Lieut. Gen. T. J. Hutton, heartened the Burmese as they marched for the first time on Burma's soil.

They gave new hope that Burma will become the base for a strong counteroffensive against the Japanese armies which are pouring into Malaya from Thailand.

The latest and heaviest Japanese air thrust at Rangoon, made in last night's moonlight, fizzled out. Several waves of Japanese bombers tried to hit military objectives in the environs of the city, but they caused only half a dozen civilian casualties.

Bombers Penetrate Cairo District

Cairo, Jan. 14 (INS).—Enemy bombers penetrated the Cairo district and dropped a few bombs on a "certain part of the northern delta," it was officially announced tonight. There were no casualties and no damage, the communique stated.

Delegates at Rio Parley Form Bloc to Break With Axis

Argentina Expected To Join Nations In Militant Front

By Turner Catledge

Rio de Janeiro, Jan. 14.—With the little Dominican Republic clamoring for a joint Pan-American declaration of war against Germany, Italy and Japan and with powerful Argentina sparring for time, the situation and prospects on the eve of the Inter-American conference of foreign ministers stood tonight somewhat as follows:

A formal resolution proposing the joint rupture of relations between the Americas and the Axis is to be presented by the representatives of Colombia, Mexico and Venezuela, countries that have severed connections already but have not declared war.

Other nations will be invited to sign but the United States will refrain for the sake of appearances and because some South American countries might find it embarrassing at first.

A resolution pledging the support of all the American nations to the Roosevelt-Churchill Atlantic Charter will be presented in the name of 17 or more countries.

Representatives of the nine Caribbean nations outside of the United States which are at war with the Axis are holding a meeting tonight to determine their course during the conference. These countries may not press a joint declaration of war if the diplomatic break is made strong enough.

Peru-Ecuador Row

The Dominican Republic apparently is determined to go ahead and put all the nations on record, however.

Ecuadorians, in insisting on settlement of the boundary dispute with Peru, hold that inasmuch as the conference is devoted to stopping aggression it might be best to start right here in the Western Hemisphere.

Other representatives say the meeting would be a farce if the controversy were left unsettled. The Peruvians are said to agree that the time has come for a settlement.

The Ecuadorian foreign minister, Julio Tobar Donoso, threatened today to walk out of the conference unless he is assured that a satisfactory solution of the dispute will be arrived at by the conference.

The speed with which the Latin-American nations that have not done so break off diplomatic relations with or declare war on the Axis depends on the assurance which the United States can give regarding their protection.

Argentina a Question

It seems the overwhelming sentiment among the delegates arriving for the conference, which opens tomorrow night, to back us in our present hour of peril. That goes even for Argentina, whose foreign minister, Dr. Enrique Ruiz Guinazu, arrived today with his staff.

Several South American groups seem apprehensive, however, regarding their immediate defense in case the Axis, following blitz tactics seeks to retaliate.

Hence some, including Argentina, want qualification in any joint action as to time and method. The situation among them is based on this realistic premise.

No doubt the United States and its allies will be able in the next six months or year to give the Western Hemisphere all the protection needed. Their faith in our ability to offer immediate defense, however, has been shaken by the Pearl Harbor and Philippine disasters.

Latin Americans realize their own weakness and must look northward for help in case of trouble.

The answer to the question, "What can the United States do to save us from Axis attack and sabotage?" is most important.

The matter of German-Italian-Japanese influence inside these countries has not yet inserted itself as a major question.

All eyes today are on Argentinians, who appear more cooperative than expected. Reports from Florianapolis, where Ruiz Guinazu spent last night, quoted him as saying the Americas must stand together in the crisis.

Certain other delegations insisted that Argentina be given the flat choice either of joining up or staying out of the solid front of American nations.

Welles Pays Calls

The reported illness of Ruiz Guinazu on the way to Rio has been the subject of considerable levity. Attaches of some Caribbean delegations suggested that his fever rose as he approached the realities of the Latin-American conference, unfrightened this time by Argentina.

Ministers of neighboring southern countries are said to insist, however, that a "solid front" without Argentine would leave their borders unduly exposed to activities of saboteurs and possibly to later attack.

Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles of the United States spent the day making calls on various delegations, seeking to iron out all possible causes of friction before the opening of the conference. The Brazilian foreign minister, Dr. Oswaldo Aranha, was similarly occupied.

If the United States achieves her major objective of closing all loopholes in the "southern front" it will be due largely to Welles' tact and Aranha's cleverness and industry.

The conference could not be held in an atmosphere more favorable to the United States. Rio de Janeiro's "Cariocans" went wild over Welles on his arrival Monday. Thousands greeted him at the airport. Hotels and stores and billboards outside are plastered with posters showing Vargas and Roosevelt seated at dinner together.

The President's Day

By International News Service

AFTER YOU, SIR: One of the President's first phone calls in the 18-hour series was picked up at the other end by brand new War Czar Donald Nelson.

Proving that he meant what he said in the statement officially putting Nelson on the dais in full command of American industrial production, the President told him that no executive order would be drawn up until Nelson decided why, what and how he wanted the War Production Board set up.

TAKE IT AWAY: Yesterday marked the end of the rope for Mr. Roosevelt on a pesty nagging daily chore that has long got in his hair. Up to Congress he sent 1000 words taking the small, private claim bills that daily pile high in his basket, and putting them on the Attorney General's desk. In these times, said the President, it is a little too much to daily peruse such little claims by the bushel basket. The same beef, with slightly different wording, put the equally numerous bridge-construction bills in the lap of the Secretary of War.

PAPER CHASE: With one clean sweep Mr. Roosevelt whisked a lot of rankling paper work from his desk. A total of six messages went up to Congress, among them one conveying the annual report of the National Resources Board.

REPORT: First appointment of the day brought in a crew of four G. O. P.'s, led by New York's Representative Joseph C. Baldwin as spokesman. The Congressional quartet of former Republican isolationists reported their observations of a two-week peek at England at war, said they found the British "determined and united." Mr. Roosevelt was glad.

UNITED NATION JR.: At noon Pierre Dupong, prime minster of overrun Luxembourg, hustled in for a half-hour of the President's time.

BEFORE LUNCH INTERIM: Before the regular one o'clock lunch hour combined with dictation at his desk, Mr. Roosevelt received and accepted the respects of Milwaukee Mayor Carl F. Zeidler, and issued a proclamation clinching the list of rules and regulations posted for alien enemies the day America entered the war.

UNFURLING: Immediately after lunch the President got the maps out, spent the afternoon studying and conferring on matters military—again as the afternoon wore into the blacked-out evening, he went over to the White house for a long, dinner-until-midnight conference with the military high command.

in command, Lieut. Gen. George H. Brett, former chief of the United States Army Air Corps, also has arrived.

The land action along the Sarawak-Borneo frontier was of preliminary nature, and in the initial fight the Dutch command reported that 18 Japanese were killed to the loss of a single defender. Sarawak, the British - protected area, was overrun some time ago by the invader.

There was no official news of the struggle in the Minahassa area in the northeastern end of the Island of Celebes, but other accounts told of hand-to-hand fighting near Lake Tondano in that theater.

The afternoon N. E. I. communique confirmed earlier announcements that the oil facilities of fallen Tarakan had been thoroughly smashed and went further to report that the Dutch naval air base on the island had been destroyed.

"The same happened to the jetty," it was added, "which was destroyed by the flames of the burning oil on the water."

No Dutch equipment was lost, the communique said, in the abandonment of the island.

Tinker Raised

15 Generals Nominated By President

A promotion list giving the Army 15 new brigadier generals, and advancing five brigadiers to the rank of major general, was sent by President Roosevelt yesterday to the Senate for confirmation.

The President also nominated ten high-ranking officers of the Navy and Marine Corps for temporary or permanent promotion.

Brig. Gen. Clarence L. Tinker, of Pawhuska, Okla., named to command the Army Air Forces in Hawaii, in the command shakeup which followed the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor, was one of the five Army men advanced to major general.

McNarney Promoted

Also promoted was Brig. Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, of Emporium, Pa., the only active officer on the special commission appointed by the President to investigate the Pearl Harbor attack and fix responsibility for American unreadiness. The other Army member and the naval officers on the commission were recalled from retirement to participate in the probe.

Brig. Gens. Fred C. Wallace, who was born at McMinnville, Tenn., and Fred L. Walker, a native of Fairfield County, Ohio, were promoted to major general.

Wallace, a Field Artillery officer who received the Distinguished Service Medal for World War services, commands the Fourth Division at Fort Benning, Ga. He is a former executive officer to the Chief of Field Artillery, and one-time member of the Field Artillery Board.

Walker, an infantryman, commands the Second Division at Fort Sam Houston, Tex. A former commander of the Fifteenth Infantry, he was more recently on the staff of the Second Army at Memphis, Tenn., and at one time was instructor at the Army War College. For heroism in France, where he commanded a front-line battalion on the Marne, he received the Distinguished Service Cross.

Gasser Moves Up

Brig. Gen. Lorenzo D. Gasser, also moved up to major general, was retired in 1940 after a brief tour as acting deputy Chief of Staff, but returned to active duty last year as War Department representative with the Office of Civilian Defense.

An Infantry officer, Gasser commanded the Sixteenth Brigade for a year and later was assistant Chief of Staff for personnel. His home is at Tiffin, Ohio.

Among the colonels nominated for promotion to brigadier general were Robert S. Olds, of Washington, D. C., who heads the Air Corps ferrying command, and two National Guard officers—Redmond F. Kernan, jr., of the 104th Feld Artillery, New York City, and Maxwell A. O'Brien, of the 113th Cavalry, Des Moines, Iowa.

The others were:

Geoffrey Keyes, Washington, D. C.; Paul W. Newgarden, Washington, D. C.; William H. H. Morris, Ocean Grove, N. J.; Willis H. Hale, Washington, D. C.; Ira C. Eaker, Eden, Tex.; Francis B. Mallon, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Charles L. Bolte, Chicago; Cornelius W. Wickersham, Cedarhurst, N. J.; John H. Hilldring, New Rochelle, N. Y.; Charles W. Ryder, Topeka, Kans.; Roscoe B. Woodruff, Oskaloosa, Iowa, and Matthew B. Ridgway, New York City.

Lieutenant colonels advanced to the regular rank of colonel, though all held the temporary rank of colonel or brigadier general, were Russell L. Maxwell, of Modesto, Calif.; John S. Wood, of Little Rock; Philip C. Faymonville, of San Francisco; Lewis A. Nickerson, of Washington; Milo P. Fox, of Galveston, Tex.; Roscoe C. Crawford, of Washington, and Charles W. Thomas, of Woodland, Calif.

In the Navy-Marine List

Temporary advancement to the rank of major general was recommended for Brig. Gen. Ross E. Rowell, 57, of Coronado, Calif., Marine Corps officer whose last published assignment was as assistant naval attache at London.

Permanent promotion as paymaster of the Marine Corps, effective February 1, for four years, was recommended for Col. Raymond R. Wright, 50, with the rank of brigadier general. The present paymaster is Brig. Gen. Russell B. Putnam, who has reached retirement age.

Three Marine Corps colonels promoted to brigadier general (temporary): Harry Schmidt, 55, Stapleton, Nebr.; William H. Rupertus 52, Washington, and Harry K. Pickettgn 54, Ridgeway, S. C.

Permanent promotions to rear admiral went to two Naval captains who were temporarily advanced on October 9. They are Robert C. Giffen, 55, Annapolis, and Jonas H. Ingram, 55, Jeffersonville, Ind.

U. S. Blacklists 1800 Pro-Axis Firms Abroad

By Hedley Donovan

Post Staff Writer

The United States yesterday extended its economic warfare to the neutral nations of Europe, announcing a blacklist of 1800 pro-Axis firms and individuals in Spain, Portugal, Switzerland, Sweden and Turkey.

Under the order, announced by the State Department, Americans are prohibited from any form of business relationship with the blacklisted concerns and persons, all of them being regarded by this Government as directly or indirectly serving the interests of the Axis.

Previously published blacklists have banned business with more than 3000 Latin-American firms and individuals, but yesterday's order was the United States Government's first extension of this form of economic warfare outside the Western Hemisphere.

Wenner-Gren Blacklisted

Many of the blacklisted firms are actual branch offices of big German and Italian enterprises, while others are nominally owned by "neutral" interests but in fact closely meshed with the Axis politico-economic machine.

The list covers utilities, chemicals, mining, shipping, machinery, banking and insurance interests, airlines and firms dealing in such well known specialties of the German export trade as drugs and optical equipment.

At the same time it announced its blacklist for the European neutrals, the State Department added to its previously published Latin-American lists the name of Axel Wenner-Gren, mysterious Swedish industrialist.

Friendly With Goering

Wenner-Gren, a multimillionaire with vast pulp and utilities holdings in Scandinavia, reputedly on friendly terms with Reichsmarshal Hermann Goering, has recently interested himself in Latin-American industrial development.

His name was placed on the black lists for Mexico and Peru.

The newest American blacklist is understood to parallel closely the British "statutory list" of pro-Axis concerns in the neutral nations of Europe.

Britain and the United States are presumably pooling their information on the Axis commercial network and the American blacklist for Europe is thought to be one of the first manifestations of the coordination of strategy in the economic field, which has been under study during the Anglo-American "war council" here.

The blacklist includes more than 30 firms and individuals in Spain's strategically situated Canary Islands, off the west coast of Africa.

Under Presidential Proclamation

Compiled by all Government agencies in a position to check Axis transactions abroad, the blacklist was promulgated over the signatures of Secretary of State Hull, Undersecretary of the Treasury Bell, Attorney General Biddle, Secretary of Commerce Jones, Milo Perkins, executive director of the Board of Economic Warfare, and Nelson Rockefeller, Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.

A Presidential proclamation of last July gave the Secretary of State authority to blacklist persons or firms "deemed to be acting for the benefit of Germany or Italy or nationals of those countries and persons to whom the exportation, directly or indirectly, of various articles or materials is deemed to be detrimental to the interest of national defense."

Aircraft Plant Blast Injures 9

East Hartford, Conn., Jan. 14 (AP).—Nine persons were injured, several of them seriously, today in an explosion at the Pratt & Whitney division of the United Aircraft Corporation, manufacturers of engines for United States Army planes.

The blast occurred, officials said, apparently while welders were instaling a dust collecting system for a machine used to spray molten aluminum on engine cylinders. They said that no sabotage was evident.

He Lost a Leg

Hero of 60's Was Cousin Of Roosevelt

CAPT. GEORGE W. ROOSEVELT

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

The story of a Roosevelt who won the Medal of Honor at Bull Run, lost a leg at Gettysburg, and fought in 15 battles in the War Between the States came to light yesterday.

He was Capt. George W. Roosevelt, of Chester, Pa., a cousin of President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Heretofore, the outstanding military hero of the Roosevelt clan has been regarded as Teddy Roosevelt, whose charge up San Juan Hill with his Rough Riders in the Spanish-American War brought him undying glory. But the deeds of Capt. George W. Roosevelt in 1861-63 would appear to make him the No. 1 soldier among those descended from old Claes van Rosevelt, who settled in New Amsterdam in 1644.

The story was brought to light in this way. Some time ago Charles Kohen, a World War veteran and prominent American Legionnaire, who owns the Hobby Shop, 716 Seventeenth Street Northwest, bought a batch of letters which had been written in the 90's to James Otis, of Portland, Me.

In going through the letters, Kohen came across one from Capt. George W. Roosevelt.

On December 23, at the time when Winston Churchill was visiting at the White House, Kohen took the letter to the Executive offices and presented it to President Roosevelt. He was told at the time that George Roosevelt was a third cousin of the President. On leaving the White House Kohen declined to tell reporters about the purpose of his visit.

In the meantime, however, he has received a thank-you note from the White House saying that the letter has been added to the "family collection" at Hyde Park.

At the time, George W. Roosevelt wrote to Otis he was United States Consul in Brussels, Belgium. His letter is dated January 9, 1894. Addressing Otis as "My Dear Sir and Comrade," he says at one point:

"I may mention that at the time of action (Bull Run) which won for me my medal, I was only 19 years of age, having enlisted at the early age of 17."

Born in Chester

He then gives something of his history. He was born at Chester, Pa., February 14, 1843, and enlisted in the Union Army at Chester on April 16, 1861. His occupation before the war, he says, was "clerk in cigar manufactory."

Among the battles in which he engaged were those at Williamsburg, Deep Bottom (or Poplar Hill), Fair Oaks, Savage Station, Glen Dale, White Oak Swamp, Malvern Hill, Bristow Station, second Bull Run, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg.

"Lost my leg at Gettysburg, Pa., Roosevelt tells Otis in filling out a blank. "Slightly wounded in the head at Fair Oaks."

Then he tells how, after Gettysburg, where he had been a first sergt., he was made brevet captain by the Governor of Pennsylvani with this citation:

"Four wounds received in gallant and meritorious conduct at the Battle of Gettysburg, Pa., on the second day of July, 1863."

The citation that went with his Medal of Honor read:

"For gallant and meritorious conduct at the Battles of Bull Run, Va., and Gettysburg, Pa."

Capt. Roosevelt's letter concludes with two notations that are not without a touch of humor. The line read:

"Recaptured regimental flag at Bull Run.

Price Control Delay Forecast

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Delayed conference action on the price-control bill predicted last night as the Administration clearly bid for a backfire of consumer resentment against food-price implications of farm-bloc amendments.

A program of "no haste" toward a conference agreement was indicated as the President's warning of inflationary damage to both consumers and farmers was reflected in Congressional mail.

President Roosevelt meanwhile was assailed and defended in the Senate for intervening in the price dispute and charges of a secret Administration compromise formula rang out in debate.

Senator Reed (Republican), of Kansas, attacked the President, challenging his statement that the Bankhead and O'Mahoney amendments would inflate food prices, and denouncing the "conduct" of Mr. Roosevelt in receiving House price conferees.

Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, said "some proposition" was being prepared outside the conference group that "does not represent the view of the Senate as its vote has been taken."

Senate Majority Leader Barkley denied there was any "impropriety" either in the President's denunciation of the farm bloc amendments or in his consultations with House conferees. The President, he said, was part of the legislative machinery, and has a voice in legislation "which he must sign or veto after it is enacted."

Barkley told Danaher there had been "no secret meetings" and conferees have had no discussion "with respect to our attitude on the Senate amendments."

In other Administration quarters it was plainly intimated that the President so keenly felt that the O'Mahoney amendment would force prices and, indirectly, wages out of line, that he would veto any bill which included it.

Meanwhile, Thomas D. Campbell, "the Montana Wheat King," who has the largest wheat ranch in the country, issued a statement saying "most of the farmers in the United States are in favor of President Roosevelt's position in regard to the price of farm products."

Campbell, now in a dollar-a-year defense post, said "present prices are very satisfactory and profitable to the producer."

"Some are even too high and almost beyond the consumer's ability to pay. Most commodities are now selling at about a so-called parity price—wheat being the only commodity which is above parity. American farmers and workers will support the President's policy with complete satisfaction."

Senate and House conferees are scheduled to meet for the first time this morning but there was reason to believe that Administration members of the group would not consent to final action before next week.

One conferee, who asked not to be quoted, said it would be unfair to rush through a report before the country, urban consumers as well as farmers, had been heard from "and they are being heard from now."

While there were continuing reports of an independent effort to draft an entirely new farm price formula, and substitute it for the plethora of technical farm price levers in both House and Senate bills, leaders said it was clear that the most controversial amendment must be voted "up or down."

The chief controversy rages around the O'Mahoney amendment which requires that industrial wages be made a factor in determining farm parity. It was this amendment that the President said would force food prices up, bring wage demands to meet climbing living costs, and force an inflationary spiral ever higher.

The President earlier objected to the Bankhead amendment, giving the Secretary of Agriculture veto power over farm-price orders of the price administrator, but has indicated he could control that if he had to through his power to hire and fire.

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, meanwhile again took issue with inflation charges against his own amendment. He said there could be no 20 to 25 per cent increase in prices unless the uncontrolled element of wages, which the authors of the price-control bill have not touched, is permitted to get out of hand.

O'Mahoney said he did not see "how farm spokesmen could be denounced for asking for an index of farm commodities of 110 to 120 per cent of the 1910-14 basis "when the level of the industrial wages is at 250 per cent of that level."

During the Senate debate, Senator Reed referred to the President's press conference statement, his letter on the Bankhead amendment "advising us how we should vote," and his talk to House conferees.

"I resent as a member of this body the interference by the President in the legislative processes to the extent that he has interfered in them," Reed said.

Stories of German Unrest Declared Nazi Propaganda

Secretary of the Navy Knox said yesterday that he believed the stories of internal unrest in Germany are false and intentionally spread by the Nazis to slow down American war preparations.

He also declared that the German retreat should not be viewed as a "rout" and that the Nazi army is "still the greatest military machine in the world."

"Almost every one of the stories about German unrest has originated in countries controlled by the Nazis," Knox told a press conference. "This alone should raise suspicion."

Knox also said the concentration of control of operations of the Navy's fleets in the hands of Admiral Ernest J. King and the transfer of various Navy Department agencies under the chief of naval operations, Admiral Harold R. Stark, to King's headquarters, indicated no lack of confidence in Stark.

"Stark's job, with the outbreak of war, carried just more work than any one man could humanly do," he said. "There had to be a division of responsibility."

OCD Wins Fight to Stay Independent

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

Soon after Mayor F. H. LaGuardia told the House Migratory Labor Committee he might resign as director of the Office of Civilian Defense, Senate and House conferees yesterday agreed to abandon the fight to put OCD under the War Department.

Also agreed to in the conference was a 100-million-dollar appropriation authorization for the agency.

Mayor LaGuardia said as soon as this bill and another to provide compensation for civilian defense workers injured at their tasks were passed, he would consider himself free to make a decision about going "back to New York and minding my own business and criticizing what is going on in Washington."

His OCD assistant, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Dean James M. Landis, new OCD executive, both joined Director LaGuardia in opposing military rule for the agency. Dean Landis told the committee he understood the War Department did not want the job and that he would be "very hesitant about going against that view."

At his first press conference yesterday afternoon, Dean Landis said he believed protective services of OCD would be functioning along the coastal regions within a couple of months.

"They may not have all their equipment by that time, but they will be effectively set up so they will spring into action on the proper signals," he said.

The new "executive" refused to clarify his authority at OCD by answering questions as to whether he or Director LaGuardia is in chief command, as the organization now stands.

He announced OCD is moving rapidly to train personnel to send into the field as instructors. Sixty Army officers, trained at Edgewood Arsenal, are ready to go into the field as instructors next week, he said.

Regional control, rather than national, is the ideal for OCD, he said—expressing belief the country is too large to operate effectively on a national-command scale.

Although Director LaGuardia told the House committee he had experienced a great deal of trouble setting up civilian defense on a metropolitan area basis because he had "to fight sheriffs and mayors," Executive Landis said he thought the regional control could be made effective.

Within the region, he said, air raid signals and all such rules should be uniform and the area should be organized to "respond instantly."

"It's important to keep the initiative and planning in a geographic area that can be handled with uniformity," he said. "This is a tough job without much glamor. We must have a civilian army accustomed to discipline and command—and army that understands it must function 24 hours daily for the duration."

Director LaGuardia told the committee he is not as worried about the war as he is about the years following and declared, "There's got to be something to come back to."

Boys should not be taken out of college and sent to camps, he said, but should be given training in the summers. Also, he condemned the "shortsightedness" of selective service in turning down "so many boys for disabilities that are not disabilities."

"These boys should be rehabilitated and formed into guard troops. We need 50 battalions of them right now to take over guard duty in this country," he declared.

Brightwood Defense Rally Set Tomorrow

A defense rally for the Brightwood defense area will be held tomorrow at 8 p. m. at Paul Junior High School to inform residents what has been done for civilian defense and air-raid precaution in their area.

Chief speaker will be Clement Murphy, chief air-raid warden. There will be music by the Metropolitan Police Boys' Club Band.

went to OCD as the Nation's De-

It is an open secret that various Government department heads resent her "stepping into their territory with suggestions and plans and accusations"—and are ready to fight back. It would be much easier to do this, however—as they realize—if she were just the Assistant Director of the Office of Civilian Defense.

On the other hand if she functioned solely as First Lady—so some of them say—her suggestions and ideas would be much easier to take. It's a mixed-up situation, at best, with not many persons knowing what to do when she makes visits to the Office of Production Management, the Department of Agriculture, the Bureau of the Budget, etc.

"What is protocol, and how can you answer her back?" they ask.

Mrs. Roosevelt's friends, expressing concern for her health, doubt even she can keep going at the pace she has set for herself—giving 12 hours a day to OCD, continuing her writing, her radio programs, and her appearances. Although she has canceled her official lecture tour to take the OCD job, she still makes speeches almost every day.

All the problems of civilian defense, however, are very close to Mrs. Roosevelt's heart and closely linked to her former activities. Those who attend her press conferences—now held at OCD—have noticed a "fighting back" and a critical attitude which the First Lady once did not have. They would not bet upon her resignation, but they are willing to direct more trouyble ahead for her unless she learns to accept conditions just as other Government officials do.

Nobody in the Government can expect to win all the time. Pet projects often are sabotaged by others, who also are fighting for their pet projects. If she stays, she is letting herself in for more heartaches—and may be tying her own hands.

general of Japanese army of occupation in the Philippines:

"'1. Anyone who inflicts or attempts to inflict an injury upon Japanese soldiers or individuals shall be shot to death.

"'2. If the assailant, or attempted assailant, cannot be found, we will hold ten influential persons as hostages who live in or about the street or municipality where the event has happened.

"'3. Officials and influential persons shall pass this warning on to your citizens and villages as soon as possible and should prevent these crimes before they happen on your own responsibilities.

"'4. The Filipinos should understand our real intentions and should work together with us to maintain public peace and order in the Philippines.'

"In addition, a radio announcement from Tokyo was made which stated that the Japanese military authorities in Manila had decreed the death penalty for any of a list of acts detrimental to the security of the Japanese armed forces. The penalty is to be inflicted, irrespective of the nationality or race of the person responsible. The acts listed in the announcement included disturbing the peace, violation of military orders, espionage, interference with communications, damage to military property, concealment of requisitioned goods and circulation of rumors concerning the Japanese forces.

"The severity of these official pronouncements is in marked contrast to the terms of cajolery used in leaflets dropped by Japanese aviators prior to the occupation of Manila. These leaflets promised the Filipinos freedom from any oppression and assured them of the friendliest of intentions on the part of the Japanese. In these leaflets, the natives were assuerd that the Japanese soldiers were coming as friends not as conquerors, and would free them from the so-called oppression of the white race.

Employers Urged To Cooperate on Draft Enrollment

In a formal proclamation yesterday the Commissioners urged all private employers here to grant sufficient time off for their male workers to participate in the second Selective Service registration on February 16.

In line with an earlier proclamation by the President, the city heads reminded that all men born on and after February 17, 1897, and on or before December 31, 1921, must register.

"We urge," said the Commissioners, "every person subject to registration to familiarize himself with the rules and regulations governing registration and to comply therewith."

The registration hours will be between 7 a. m. and 9 p. m.

23 Convicts Flee From Prison Farm

Huntsville, Tex. Jan. 14 (U.P.).—Twenty-three dangerous criminals sawed their way out of a main building at the Eastham Prison farm near here tonight.

Two were recaptured immediately and dogs from surrounding prison farms and from the penitentiary at Huntsville were put on the trail of the others. Ed Morris, one of those recaptured, was shot in the left arm by guards.

Hopes of Eased Tire Rationing Are Scotched

Despite plans for obtaining 400,000 tons of synthetic rubber a year, beginning in the middle of 1943, highly placed production officials warned last night that the "tire famine" may be expected to continue in equal, if not increasing, severity for the duration of the war.

Leon Henderson, head of the Office of Price Administration, issued a vehement statement declaring that hopes of relaxing the tire rationing program were "false." His aides added that it would be the height of folly for civilians to cease guarding their existing tires in the expectation of being able to replace them before the war was over.

Henderson said that press comment, based on Federal Loan Administrator Jesse Jones' announcement of a program for obtaining capacity to produce 400,000 tons of the sythetic product, had given rise to false hopes that the rationing program could be immediately relaxed.

Henderson added that "it is entirely possible that every pound of sythetic rubber that can be produced in the future may be needed for direct military use."

Other sources, meanwhile, were even more pessimistic than the Office of Price Administration, in charge of the tire rationing program. They expressed grave doubts that the 400,000 tons objective could be realized, because of its requirements of such basic and scarce war materials as nickel steel, and because of the possibility that it might seriously interfere with the military essential of expanding production of 100-octane, aviation gasoline.

Even if the goal is reached, these technical sources explained, the prospect of military requirements for rubber is so enoromus and is expanding at such a rapid rate that "we'll be very lucky indeed if two years from today we have as much rubber for tires as we have at the moment."

Henderson himself hinted that even if the military situation in the Far East improved and shipping could be resumed, the "scorched earth" policy of the Dutch and British might put an end to rubber supplies for many years.

set by the Office of Production Management.

In furtherance of the "stockpile" program, OPM yesterday telegraphed automobile manufacturers conditions that must govern shipments of passenger cars to dealers, effective today. The conditions are:

1. No "stockpile" car is to be sold without "specific" permission from OPA, such permission to be granted when OPA deems the sale to be in "the public interest," but "probably not earlier than January, 1943."

2. Tires and tubes on the stored car are to be made available to OPA "at any time," but the dealer will be compensated "to the extent of the wholesale price."

3. The stored car must not be sold, when permission is granted, at a price higher than the sum of the manufacturer's list price, the Federal excise tax, transportation allowance at carload rail freight from factory to dealer, allowance of 5 per cent of the total of list price and the transportation allowance, or $75, whichever is lower, to cover handling and delivery.

4. To compensate dealers for storage, insurance, financing and other expenses during the preiod the cars are stored, 1 per cent may be added to the list price of the car, or $15, whichever is lower, for every storage month after February 1.

Hollywood, Jan. 14 (INS).—Ruth Hussey, screen actress, today admitted her engagement to Lincoln Fogarty, Kansas City businessman.

Dad of 17 Denied Tires to Take Them to School

A father of 17 children, who said he needed his car to transport groceries and "take the kids to school," yesterday was refused new tires by the District's tire rationing board.

There was a note of reluctance in the denial, announced by Chairman Whitney Leary. He withheld the man's name, explaining that only the identification of successful applicants are made public.

The father said he owned a Model T Ford and applied for new tires on the basis of:

"Transportation of groceries for the wife and 17 children. Also transportation of nine of my kids to and from school."

Sidelights of the War

Nazi, Italian Ship Losses Total 5,225,000 Tons, British Report

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Jan. 14.—A total of 5,225,000 tons of German and Italian ships were sunk or damaged during the 28 months of war ended December 31 last, according to a statement issued here today.

To this tonnage, claimed by the British alone, are to be added the losses inflicted by the Russians, estimated at approximately 498,000 tons, and the enemy shipping tied up in South American ports which is as good as lost to the Axis, said the statement.

The losses inflicted on Japanese shipping are at present estimated at a tonnage of 128,000.

Since the beginning of the war the Germans and Italians have declared 15,734,523 tons of merchant shipping sunk. This claim is stated to be "amply disproved by the continual arrival of supplies to this country."

Wartime Odyssey

San Francisco, Jan. 14 (AP).—After a futile transpacific journey in a naval patrol bomber and 22 nights in a Midway Island dugout, Roelof A. Schotman, a man with a country he cannot reach, was no closer home today than on December 3.

Home for the 64-year-old Dutch colonial is the Netherlands East Indies, where he is president of the planters' union.

A delegate to the international labor conference at New York last fall, he started for Batavia early in December aboard a P. B. Y. bomber through arrangements made by the Dutch Ministry at Washington.

The Navy plane was only two hours from Wake Island when the Japanese first attacked that outpost.

Warned by radio to turn back, the plane reached Midway just before bombs began to strike there too.

For 22 nights Schotman shared the dugouts with the construction gangs and hotel personnel, while United States Marines put up a defense the East Indies planter described as magnificent.

Then back to Honolulu, and from Honolulu to San Francisco by boat.

"Now I go to Washington," he said. "If I cannot get home, I hope they will give me a job, a place to work, so I can help beat those Japs."

Mickey and His Bride Coming to Celebrations

THAT BEAMING YOUNG BRIDEGROOM, Mickey Rooney, who happens also to be the cinema's No. 1 box-office star for the third successive year, will be one of the Hollywood headliners in attendance at the President's Diamond Jubilee Birthday celebrations in Washington on January 30. He will be accompanied by his bride, the former Ava Gardner, 19-year-old screen starlet from North Carolina, whom he wed last Saturday in Ballard, Calif.

MICKEY ROONEY

The youthful Mrs. Rooney had much to do with this arrangement. In discussing their honeymoon plans, it seems, Mrs. Rooney expressed a keen desire to get a first-hand view of a President's Birthday celebration in the National Capital. The bridegroom-to-be, already sold on the idea by past experience, took the matter up with Major Domo Louis B. Mayer, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and his public relations chief, Howard Strickling, and that was that. Before coming to Washington, Mr. and Mrs. Mickey will appear in Boston for the American Red Cross, under the protective wing of Les Peterson, the M.-G.-M. functionary regularly assigned as the Rooney pilot, who, incidentally, acted as best man at the wedding of the pair last week.

This may all be new to the blushing bride, as we say at the Knitting Society, but it will be old stuff to the Mick. He has stolen the show in Washington on numerous previous occasions —first when he and Judy Garland appeared in person for a day at Loew's Capitol; again when he "discovered" Red Skelton at an earlier Birthday celebration and brought him to the attention of the M.-G.-M. high command, and most recently at last year's Inaugural Gala, in Constitution Hall, when he ran away with the all-star bill with his impersonations, impromptu spoofing and personal performance at the piano of a movement from his own "Melodante" symphony. Even if nobody else shows up—as many assuredly will—this year's Birthday celebrations are a guaranteed success, with the Rooneys on hand.

And while we are at it, we might as well bring this whole benefit business down to date—or up, as the case may be. Probably as important as any is the fact that tickets for the "command performance" of Lillian Hellman's prize play of "Watch on the Rhine," at the National on Sunday night, January 25, go on sale at the box-office this morning. Those wise in the ways of such things will be in line early. With such a play and such a cast—led by Paul Lukas, Lucile Watson, Mady Christians and George Coulouris—for such a magnificent cause, the single performance is pretty apt to be a sellout over night. And the Mile o' Dimes collection drive for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis is now rolling, too. Opened Monday at Radio Center by Mrs. Roosevelt, the Roxyettes and Roy Davis, of the current Earle stage show, were the chief attraction on Tuesday.

Dots and Dashes

Mailed in London at 5:15 p. m., December 17, opened, examined and resealed by the censor, presumably the last of the Christmas cards arrived at the desk this week. It bore the simple legend, "Greetings from Anna Neagle" and pictured that brilliant No. 1 British feminine star as the late Amy Johnson Mollison, C. B. E., Britain's famous airwoman, killed on active service, January 5, 1941, the role she is depicting in her next film. Thanks for the memory . . . S. Thomas Gomez, recently playing the Richard Whorf role with Lunt and Fontanne in "There Shall Be No Night," now closed, has been signed by Cheryl Crawford for an important part in "The Flowers of Virtue," Marc Connelly's new play, to be given its premiere in the National on Monday night . . . Frank Craven, star of the play, also will be visible on the screen at the Hiser Theater, Bethesda, next Wednesday and Thursday in a revival screening of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" . . . Private (first class) Joe Neatrour, Public Relations Department, Fort Belvoir, Va., writes in to correct misinformation supplied this desk regarding the military status of Buddy Grover and Ralph Glaser, whose song, "We Salute You, Uncle Sam," will be broken out at the Earle Friday. They are not in the Thirtieth Engineers. Buddy is assigned to the 1320th Service Unit and Ralph to Headquarters Company of the Engineer Replacement Training Center. Hope this makes their outfits happier . . . "The Beachcombers of 1942," a fast-action, musical frolic with a star cast, first of Eddie Dowling's training camp productions to reach this territory through USO-Camp Shows, Inc., will play Fort Belvoir, January 20 and 21, and Camp Meade on January 22, 23 and 24 . . . Katharine Cornell is opening Henri Bernstein's first play in English, "Rose Burke," for two weeks in San Francisco on January 19, thence working her way East to open in Detroit on February 16. Do we get it some time after that—I hope?

HEDDA HOPPER

Workmen on Set Like the Guy!

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 14. I think you're going to like Jean Gabin in "Moontide." I found him on the most realistic set — a duplicate of the breakwater at San Pedro, with oily water, smelly fish, flying seagulls, a special machine throwing spray over the wall, and Jean pacing back and forth on top of the wall, keeping a weather eye out for Ida Lupino, because he expects to marry her in a few minutes. She's supposed to round the bned in a motor boat. When Director Archie Mayo doesn't like his English, he stops him, but when Gabin doesn't like his acting, he stops himself. The workmen, best critics in the land, are crazy about the guy.

ELEANOR POWELL

Archie Mayo took time out to tell me the story of a dinner party he gave a few weeks ago. He asked Fanny Brice to come in after dinner, and she brought with her the famous dancing partner of the Dolly Sisters and Gaby Delys, Harry Pilcer, who was dressed up in a gray wig and her cook's uniform. When Harry served a huge, overly ripe cheese, Archie never looked up. But when he said, "I've been wanting to do this for a long time," and pushed the cheese in his face, an Army officer present said, "Now I've seen everything!"

Neatest trick of the week: Eleanor Powell in full evening dress has to do a swan dive from a springboard into a pool, be caught by a swimmer, tossed ten feet to another swimmer, and still can't get her dress wet because it's made of sequins and would turn into jelly.

Ann Sothern's still so hepped up over the swordfish she caught this summer she's hung the fishing rod over her living room mantel, and is letting her interior decorator yell his head off.

Humphrey Bogart finds out he's tougher than he thought he was. Warden Clinton Duffy, of San Quentin, sent him a pocket dictionary of prison "Slanguage," and Bogey discovered he'd been calling people on the screen worse names than he realized.

Rags Ragland says his colored man, Jackson, is a perfect understudy for Rochester. Yesterday Jackson informed him they were all out of food. "What on earth's become of it?" Rags asked. "Ah dunno, boss. Ah can't understand it—ain't nobody but me got a key to that pantry."

Lloyd Nolan tells of the columnist's kid who was kept after school and made to write, "I don't know my lesson" on the blackboard 500 times. When his pop heard about it, he said, "Well, what do you know! My kid's being syndicated!"

Bud Abbott claims Clark Gable is a traffic menace. Bud persuaded Mrs. Abbott to take driving lessons, and the first day out alone, when Clark drove past, she ran right into a building—and hasn't touched the darn thing since!

LEONARD LYONS

New York, Jan. 14.

MIKE JACOBS: Wendell Willkie, who introduced Buddy Baer as Max Baer—at the Joe Louis fight Friday night—watched Buddy go down three times, and gagged: "I still don't see the difference" . . . WILLIAM KNUDSEN: The job on which Justice Byrnes now is working is the reorganization of the war administration setup, which Justice William O. Douglas will head . . . JOE SCHENCK: In Miami Beach, four years ago, you introduced Joe E. Lewis to a man he thought was a producer. Lewis razzed him all night. Friday night that man came to the Copacabana and asked for Lewis. When Joe met him, the man asked: "Why are you so cold?" Joe couldn't tell him—he never realized that the man was Lord Beaverbrook.

AL JOLSON

ED FLYNN: Senator Hatch, author of the Hatch Act, is getting his judgeship in New Mexico . . . EDDIE CANTOR: Romo Vincent, who left your show a few days before its Broadway premiere, now has calling cards which read: "Romo Vincent, late star of 'Banjo Eyes' rehearsals" . . . JUDITH ANDERSON: Last year, when Rosten and Spigelgass wrote your new picture, "All Through the Night," they sent the story first to Alfred Hitchcock. A short while ago Hitchcock finally replied, asking Leo Rosten to discuss the story with him. Rosten's answer was: "Go to the corner movie where the picture is being previewed now, and we'll be able to discuss it more fully."

GEN. ARNOLD: Station KIRO, in Seattle, now is treasuring a letter, received before the war, from Hickam Field. It read: "This letter will be quite late, but we think that you will appreciate its receipt. We picked you up at latitude 19° 42', longitude 154° 26' at 9:37 p. m. Hawaiian Standard Time, while flying out over the ocean at 10,000' in a Flying Fortress. We enjoyed your broadcast, and feel reasonably sure that we will win top honors for distance of reception. Please drop us a line and let us know when you'll broadcast our program. We would appreciate it if you would open and close the concert with 'The Army Air Corps' song . . . Pilots: Lieut. J. E. Henry and Capt. Colin P. Kelly."

EQUITY: Fred De Cordova is working for Alfred Bloomingdale in the latter's production of "High Kickers." Fred was signed last week to become the producer of the Louisville Municipal Opera. His assistant there will be his current boss, Bloomingdale . . . FCC: Al Jolson flew back to New York to sign a new radio contract. It provides that the broadcast series would depend upon the Government moves—in regulating future radio programs, and in priorities involving the sponsor's product . . . GANSON PURCELL: Ted Sheridan and Joe Pannuck are leaving the SEC—Sheridan, to go with Lessing Rosenwald at OPM, and Pannuck with the Economic Defense Board.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT: Jimmy Walker, in urging a group of laborers to buy defense bonds, told them: "If Colin Kelly could afford to dive into a Japanese battleship, you can afford to dive into your pockets for cash with which to buy bonds" . . . MOSS HART: Evelyn Wyckoff, who left your "Lady in the Dark" to replace Jessie Matthews in "The Lady Comes Across"—which opened and closed last week—is expected to sign with George Jessel's "High Kickers" . . . ANN CORIO: George Jean Nathan went to Gypsy Rose Lee's party last week and said: "I never'd miss one of Gypsy's parties. She's the most completely typical American character in the country."

MAX GORDON: Roth McKenney, author of the book, "My Sister Eileen," is not working for OEM, as reported. She's working on a new book . . . HENRY WALLACE: A member of the visiting British delegation, baffled by the complexities and red tape of our war program, described one of the Washington committees as running around "like a head without a chicken." . . . JUSTICE FRANK MURPHY: When a visitor at the United States Supreme Court said that for the first time in memory no member of that judicial body has a beard or mousache, one jurist countered: "But Frank Murphy's eyebrows take up the slack."

SECRETARY MORGENTHAU: Walt Disney now is working on a Mickey Mouse movie short for the Government, explaining how to make out income tax reports. It is aimed at members of the low-income group who, for the first time, are required to pay taxes . . . In it, Disney shows the pugnacious Donald Duck, eager to lick the Japs, filling out his tax return. When asked about "Dependents," Donald enumerates his three ducklings . . . The Government's income tax experts who are assisting Disney spent an hour deciding—in view of the fact that he has three ducklings but no wife—just what is the marital status of Donald Duck.

Army Chiefs at Navy Benefit Applaud 'Ice-Capades of 1942'

By Richard L. Coe

Schicklegruber would have gone nuts if he'd been with us last night. (All right, so what if that isn't how you spell Schicklegruber?)

Little Adolf would have seen Gen. George C. Marshall and Sir John Dill, chiefs of staff of the American and British armies, sitting together in a box at the "Ice-Capades" opening in Uline Arena. When those two army heads sit down together it usually isn't for a revue on ice, but there they were, laughing at Joe Jackson, jr.'s slick bicycle act and without being seated in a bullet-proof cage surrounded by fawning jackals. What's more, the army men were there to do honor to the Navy Relief Society benefit, sponsored by the Variety Club.

Consequently, Little Adolf would not have enjoyed the "Ice-Capades of 1942" anywhere nearly as much as we did. The second edition of the spectacle which opened the Uline Arena nearly a year ago is a thoroughly superior successor to the one we saw that night—a smooth-running version of something that is purely a modern phenomenon. The incredible facility of motion, combining the beauty of the ballet and the winged genius of Mercury, the sock 'em-slam 'em brand of comedy that brings out an audience's laughs from the midriffs are once again blended into an entertainment that was viewed as a fantastic conception less than a decade ago. A near-capacity house cheered and applauded with a spontaneity that should make this year's engagement an unqualified success.

Some Spectacular Principals

This year's "Ice-Capades" benefits from a second act that is better than its first and a half-dozen principals who are beginning to compare favorably with the big names of its competitor, the "Ice Follies." Competition always has been the life of trade. To this sedentary skater, Megan Taylor seems a topnotch newcomer to a company that is substantially the same as last season's. She has a good deal of the fire of Evelyn Chandler. Youth, beauty and a brilliant, flashing technique make her "Widow" one of the high points of the show. And, by golly, a little later, up pops her father, Phil Taylor, a veritable Johnny Walker on stilts and another superb addition to the cast.

From last year, you'll naturally remember England's blond Belita, charmingly facile as a little Dutch girl in one of the big production numbers, one that's blessed with admirable lightning and swirling movement. Then, too, there's Lois Dworshak, who proceeds, believe it or not, to do a strip-tease on ice—in the dark. But don't get worried, mothers, everything's quite as it should be. Vera Hruba, the Czech girl who was so much in the matrimonial news last year, is back with several new turns.

And what would an ice revue be without a waltz number? This one is as applause-getting as any, with Donna Atwood and Robin Lee doing breath-taking twirls. The waltz certainly never will go out of style so long as there are skaters to do it.

Generous dashes of comedy climax with the swell bicycle act Joe Jackson, jr., inherited from his comic father. Eric Waite, Larry Jackson, Bernie Lynam and Al Surette are on deck for several of these.

Wondrous "Red" McCarthy

Oh, yes, there's also some neat precision work by Robert Dench and Rosemarie Stewart, particularly the "Bolero" number, which makes theirs among the top spots of the evening. "Red" McCarthy's flashing Indian dance is as fine a spectacle of motion as you'll ever see on ice—or ballet for that matter. (Migosh, how come we put "Red's" triumph this far down?).

The two army chiefs had a lot of fellow celebrities in the audience. From Hollywood came Dorothy Lamour, now spending her six-weeks vacation as a Minute Man for the Treasury Department's drive for Defense Stamps and Bonds. Miss Lamour was introduced for a brief talk, by Ray Michael, who also directed the spotlight on Mrs. Harold Stark and Mrs. Thomas Hart, whose husbands' work means so much now in the Pacific; Attorney General Biddle, Secretary Wickard, Admiral Jacobs and Senators Meade, Clark and La Follette. As you see, it would have been quite an audience for Hitler to hate, those thousands of Navy-benefitting customers.

The "Ice-Capades of 1942" will continue its run in the Uline Arena, Third and M Streets Northwest, through Sunday the 25th, with matinees Saturdays and Sundays.

AutographHounds Enjoy Field Day

Autograph hunters had a field day on Motor Avenue in Palms, leading to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. Mickey Rooney was doing opening scenes in "The Courtship of Andy Hardy," beginning at 8 o'clock in the morning.

Nearly every star on the M-G-M roster passed the company on the way to work, and all stopped to say hello to Mickey. Every time a car would pull up it would be surrounded by autograph seekers from 3 to 60 in years, and all escorted by Rooney. Spencer Tracy, Hedy Lamarr, Bud Abbott and Lou Costello, Walter Pidgeon, Nelson Eddy, Eleanor Powell and Ann Rutherford were among those halted.

Especially enjoying the situation were nearly two dozen youngsters in a Palms orphanage, adjoining the spot where Mickey was working. They saw more stars during the morning than they had ever seen before.

Healy's Resignation From SEC Reported Given to President

By James J. Strebig
Associated Press Staff Writer

Robert E. Healy—known as "Judge" to the Nation's utility industry—has resigned from the securities commission, it was reported reliably yesterday.

Healy declined to comment on the report, although it was understood that President Roosevelt already had received his letter of resignation.

The "Judge" is the only original member of the SEC still with the commission. He was appointed when the SEC was established in 1934 after having served as chief counsel of the Federal Trade Commission. In that capacity he had charge of public hearings in the investigation of certain public utilities which led eventually to Government regulation of utility holding companies.

Healy is 58, a native of Bennington, Vt., and a Republican. He once served on the Vermont Supreme Court.

In recent years he has disagreed on occasion with other members of the commission over policy matters, including a persistent objection to the disposal of certain types of applications without a public hearing. His latest disagreement is understood to be over the selection of Ganson Purcell as chairman in anticipation of the elevation of Chairman Edward C. Eicher to be chief justice of the Federal District Court for the District of Columbia. A Senate committee will consider Eicher's nomination soon.

Purcell, who is 36, was advanced to a commissionership last spring from director of the SEC's trading and exchange division. He is a native of San Gabriel, Calif., and a Harvard Law School graduate.

One of the two prospective vacancies on the commission must be filled by a member of some party other than the Democratic, since no more than three of the five members may be of the same party.

One name already mentioned for the minority membership is that of Edwin M. Dougherty, of San Francisco, a member of the California Corporation Commission. Informed persons commented that it was too early to speculate on a successor to Healy, but that there was some reason to believe that the appointment would go to the Far West.

It appears likely that Robert H. O'Brien, director of the SEC public utility division, will be chosen to fill the vacancy caused when Eicher goes to the bench. O'Brien is a native of Butte, Mont., and a graduate of the University of Chicago Law School. He formerly was assistant general counsel of the commission, assistant director of the registration division and associate director of the utility division.

The commission has had a heavy turnover in its top personnel in its seven years of existence. Purcell will become the sixth chairman and when the two prospective vacancies are filled they will be the fifteenth and sixteenth appointments to the agency.

7 Policemen Are Retired Under Age Rule

Two police lieutenants, an acting sergeant and four privates were ordered retired by the Commissioners yesterday under regulations governing maximum ages for service.

The lieutenants were John T. Wittstatt, 67, of the Tenth Precinct, and William H. Carlin, 65, commander of the Harbor Precinct.

The acting sergeant is John W. Kite, 68, attached to administrative headquarters.

The order retiring Private John M. A. McKimmie, 57, Fifth Precinct, was approved at his own request. The other privates were Frank M. Howard, 68, Harbor Precinct; John W. Clinkscales, 64, Fifth Precinct, and William W. McGregor, 66, Tenth Precinct.

Lieut. Wittstatt, one of the department's most popular officers, was appointed to the force in 1905 and has served more than 36 years.

Lieut. Carlin was named to the Metropolitan Police Department in 1902. He has been commander of the Harbor Precinct for seven years.

Acting Sergt. Kite became a policeman in 1903 and during his more than 38 years of services saw duty in the various precincts before his assignment to administrative headquarters several years ago.

Of the privates, McKimmie was appointed in 1912; Howard in 1896; Clinkscales in 1907 and McGregor in 1898.

Yesterday's orders were in line with a policy adopted last year by the Commissioners making retirement in the Police and Fire Departments mandatory at the age of 64.

FALSE TEETH
That Loosen Need Not Embarrass

Many wearers of false teeth have suffered real embarrassment because their plate dropped, slipped or wabbled at just the wrong time. Do not live in fear of this happening to you. Just sprinkle a little FASTEETH, the alkaline (non-acid) powder, on your plates. Holds false teeth more firmly, so they feel more comfortable. Does not sour. Checks "plate odor" (denture breath). Get FASTEETH at any drug store.

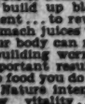
Two Steps to amazing new pep, vitality—better looks!

● Restore vital digestive juices in the stomach . . . energize your body with rich, red blood. Here's how!

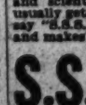
S.S.S.

● If you are one of those unfortunates who have worked under a strain, failed to eat the proper foods, have been vexed by overtaxing worries, or have suffered with colds, the flu, or other illness . . . yet have no organic trouble or focal infection . . . and your red-blood-cells have become reduced in vitality and number . . . if your stomach digestion refuses to work properly, then here is what should help you!



S.S.S.

● S.S.S. Tonic is especially designed to build up blood strength when deficient . . . to revive and stimulate those stomach juices which digest the food so your body can make proper use of it in rebuilding worn-out tissue. These two important results enable you to enjoy the food you do eat . . . to make use of it as Nature intended. Thus you may get new vitality . . . pep . . . become more attractive!



S.S.S.

● Because S.S.S. is in liquid form it begins its work as soon as you take it. Surprising results may be had by making the S.S.S. treatment a part of your daily diet. Thousands and thousands of users have testified to the benefits S.S.S. Tonic has brought to them and scientific research shows that it usually gets results—that's why so many say "S.S.S. Tonic builds sturdy health and makes you feel like yourself again."

Wartime Traffic

One would think, offhand, that the curtailment of nonessential auto travel means a probable drop in the appalling toll of traffic fatalities. This does not necessarily follow, according to the National Safety Council. In England, for example, where travel has been curtailed almost since the start of the war, daytime fatalities—leaving entirely out of account fatalities due to blackouts—have greatly increased. There are apparently a number of reasons for this: the use of older and mechanically unsound cars; the use of tires beyond the safety point, and the tempo and urgency of war production and transportation which have complicated the traffic problem. All this, of course, is exactly what we are now up against. And the assumption is that we shall fare no better than the British.

Traffic deaths here in the District, as throughout the country, are almost abreast of the toll this time last year. Very much to the point, therefore, is the effort of local officials to set up an efficient accident-control program. Police records show that of the 95 persons killed on Washington streets last year, more than half were violating crosswalk regulations. Sensibly, therefore, the accident-prevention unit of the Police Department is about to begin a new campaign to enforce safe street-crossing practices. But if British experience is any criterion, safe driving rules must also be enforced more stringently than ever. Pedestrian observance of traffic lights and crosswalks has improved notably in recent months. Unfortunately this encouraging manifestation of regard for the law does not apply equally to drivers, some of whom continue to shoot around the District at excessive speeds. The traffic squad should get after them.

Scorching Britain

Appalled by the human suffering created by war's devastation, it is not surprising that most people think little of the purely financial losses resulting from the march of invading armies. Nevertheless the financial problems created by the loss of overseas assets represented by investments in rubber plantations and tin mines are matters of vital concern to all the British people—not merely to those who own shares in the companies that have developed such properties. The British economic system is, as we know, far from self-sustaining. Britain cannot live upon her own resources, nor can she export enough to pay for the goods she must have to maintain customary or even tolerable living standards for the millions resident in the British Isles.

The funds with which to pay for imports far in excess of exports have in the past largely come from the returns due British owners of valuable properties and businesses located abroad. A large proportion of the rubber and the tin which we obtain in the Far East, for example, creates profits for British investors in the shares of rubber companies and tin mines located in Malaya. When those plantations and mines pass into Japanese possession, British investors suffer individual losses, but the British nation as a whole suffers as well. For every nation has to restrict its imports to what can be paid for either with exported goods or through accumulation of foreign balances from investments and funds acquired on credit by means of foreign loans. The last World War left Britain still in possession of immense overseas investments. The present one has already made serious inroads on such holdings, and the end is not yet in sight. For instance, it has been estimated that the disappearance from the British trade balance of a favorable item of 300 million dollars will result from the stoppage of rubber and tin shipments alone. For the duration of the war British deficiencies in funds can and undoubtedly will be compensated by liberal advances and credits from the United States and other allies. But after the war the British will be in serious straits unless they regain the valuable and productive overseas possessions that have been lost to them for the time being. They have also the mortification of seeing the United States—by far the world's greatest consumer—turn increasingly to the synthetic product.

Nelson's Job

The appointment of Donald M. Nelson as head of a new War Production Board is a belated recognition of the paramount need for real industrial direction of the war effort. But it does not go far enough. Mr. Nelson, doubtless, will be ranked only by the President in the wartime importance of his job. He should therefore be related to the other executive departments as a department head with a seat in the Cabinet. That is what this newspaper has had in mind in pleading for the setting up of a Department of Supply. It is not enough to get rid of our present sprawling organization which most persons even in that organization can hardly understand. The new body should be endowed with the authority of a department so that the man in charge can be given the prestige of a Cabinet official in a board which includes not only Cabinet members but the Vice President as well.

This reform is the more necessary because of the tussle which has been in progress between the military and civilian branches of government. Procurement has hitherto been vested in the service departments. When war broke out, and the Allies began to coordinate their strategy, it was obvious that there must be a similar tieup on the supply side. Another need also became apparent. Both the strategists and the directors of supply of the anti-Axis powers (chiefly the Americans and the British) had to be linked in order that supplies could be swiftly and smoothly moved to the places designated by the strategists. The service departments in both London and Washington sought to coordinate and keep both the strategic and supply jobs in their own hands. Thus the Presidential order represents a victory for the civilian direction of the industrial effort. But the victory would be more complete if Mr. Nelson were given equal rank in the Executive branch with Secretaries Knox and Stimson. Moreover, Mr. Nelson needs to have a maximum of prestige because he will have to link and coordinate his work with ministers of supply in other countries.

The step so far taken should be of incalculable benefit both in saving time in Washington and in spurring production. Red tape in managing the war effort had become endless. Requisitions for lend-lease contracts, for instance, had to pass through so many hands that they took longer to OK than to fulfill. Personal problems added to the complications of red tape. They sometimes seemed to cost more time and energy than the job in hand, and were the inevitable concomitant of the Presidential system of leaving most of the defense appointees in a twilight zone of authority. The result was seen when the automobile industry had to be enlisted for war work, and no plan for converting the facilities of that industry was forthcoming from the Office of Production Management.

Certainly the new set-up should solve all such problems. Under Mr. Nelson will now be concentrated the supervision for procuring the goods, allocating the raw materials, giving out the contracts and seeing that the goods are made and delivered speedily. At least, that is the impression that is given out. There is a vagueness in the terminology of the announcement which leaves some room for doubt as to the degree of Mr. Nelson's supervision of the procurement agencies in the service departments. It is said that the decision of Mr. Nelson as to "questions of procurement and production will be final." If this leaves another twilight zone, the filling of which is left to Mr. Nelson's personality, that may promote more friction than coordination. That is another argument for elevating the War Production Board into a department of government.

Mr. Jones Awakes

Mr. Jesse Jones seems to be the Rip Van Winkle of this Administration. Back in the midsummer of 1940 the Defense Plant Corporation had prepared a contract for the building of a synthetic rubber plant with a capacity of 100,000 tons a year, or about an eighth of our total yearly consumption. That plant would have been in operation today, and its capacity could have been doubled, but for Mr. Jones' objections. As Federal Loan administrator he blocked the proposal on the grounds of its business unwisdom. The product, to be sure, would cost twice as much as natural rubber and, besides, would leave a readjustment problem to be faced in the postwar era. (Eventually Mr. Jones was persuaded to finance the construction of four pilot plants with a total output of 10,000 tons. But that was a year later and 10,000 tons are a mere trickle compared with our requirements.) There is no need nowadays, when rubber has become more precious than rubies, to stress how all-important it was to have not only ample stocks of rubber but also to have synthetic rubber-making capacity. Rubber is almost the Achilles heel of our economy, and our lack of preparedness in this respect constitutes a stunning defeat even more heinous than Pearl Harbor.

Mr. Jones has awakened as the result of the disclosure of our parlous situation in rubber. Contracts have been let which will expand production, according to Mr. Jones, by 400,000 tons. Mr. Jones is to be congratulated on his celerity. There would be little point, when all attention should be given to the war effort, in asking now why he has been asleep so long. But Mr. Jones asks for it. He says he does not know "anybody who anticipated that we would be cut off from supplies in the Far East." Mr. Jones in the last three years must have been living so well insulated a life that he cannot have done much reading of the papers or much conversing with our policy makers. Why does Mr. Jones think we were buying stockpiles of rubber? His remark is a classic illustration of the lack of alertness in an Administration which for three years has been seeking to put the country on the alert. The country is paying a heavy price for Mr. Jones and a caution which amounts to negligence.

Malta Rumors

For some time speculation has run riot about Hitler's next move. A drive across Turkey to the oil fields of the Middle East; an attack on Gibraltar by way of Spain; a foray into West Africa made possible through the taking over of the French fleet and French bases—these and other possibilities have been discussed. And each of them has been bolstered by rumors of German military and aerial concentrations in this or that part of Occupied Europe. Now Hitler's finger appears to be pointing in still a new direction. According to rumors emanating from Spain, the next objective of the Germans will be Malta, Britain's stout island bastion in the Central Mediterranean between Sicily and Africa.

Such an attack, designed to remove a thorn in the flesh of the Axis, would be a logical move. The Germans have been making a brave stand in Libya. But they have never succeeded in solving the difficult problem of transportation. Supplies and reinforcements to General Rommel's forces have to cross the Mediterranean from Sicily and are therefore subject to the punishing attacks of the British fleet and of British air power based, in part, on Malta. The result has been a steadily rising toll of Axis transports and escort vessels which have been sent to the bottom. And these losses have been reflected in the retreat of the Axis forces from the Egyptian border during the past seven weeks. An attack in force on Malta, designed to prevent its use by the British as a defensive-offensive base, would thus fit in with Axis plans of preventing the British from completing their conquest of Libya. Yet the venture, should it be undertaken, would not be an easy one. Unlike Crete, Malta is well defended. It has been bombed hundreds of times in the period since Italy entered the war. An attack confined to air bombardment, even on a scale never before attempted, and accompanied by the landing of parachute troops could prove exceptionally costly.

Enemy Germs

Surgeon General Parran caused quite a stir at the Conference of Mayors when he warned that the enemy has planned and will use bacteriological warfare wherever possible. No prospect strikes greater chill than that of mass attack by bacteria so deposited as to insure a maximum of casualties. For, as the Surgeon General emphasized, such attack can be as deadly as mustard gas or explosives. To the layman, in fact, bacteriological warfare implies a far worse threat, since he knows little or nothing about it. Dr. Parran rightly urged the mayors to take every possible precaution and to get expert advice on the subject. But it would be in the nature of a public service if health officials would issue simple preventive instructions for laymen. From now on some foodstuffs, notably dairy products, will undoubtedly be subjected to more searching examination before they reach consumers. Yet this is only a step in prevention which, in the last analysis, depends on the inherent caution of the individual. As things now stand, the Surgeon General has raised a bogey which leaves the individual frightened but uninformed. It is an undesirable situation which could be cleared up by a frank statement of how bacteriological warfare may be waged.

BRIGHT ONSET

The west was a torrent of gold rushing north to the hills
Under clouds blown forward like smoke on the racing wind.
The mountain ramparts lifted their dark defense
Against the bright onset that in glittering waves
Leaped the horizon, vaulted the valleys and slopes,
And broke on the highest summits in shattering floods.
In the sky, in the air were excitement and challenge, the earth
Had marshaled the woods in chromatic column and rank
Where they stormed the escarpments, planting their vivid flags
On redoubt and battlement in the light's full tide:
Beauty triumphant taking the autumn hills,
Leaving within the heart her flaming sword.

Letters To The Editor

All communications must carry the writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents letters should be held to 300 words. Letters are subject to condensation.

Patriotic Farmers

My father farmed for 20 years; my brother lives on a farm. No one can convince me that the grasping, selfish action of the farm bloc of the Senate, in voting for no control of agricultural prices until they exceed "parity" of 20 per cent, truly represents the farmers of America.

The manufacturers of the country have cooperated in an admirable way in a system of price-control, largely voluntary. Since Pearl Harbor, labor has united in a splendid effort to defeat the dictators. But the farmers, according to their supposed political leaders, are out to grab their last ounce of advantage from the Nation's danger, come what may to the war effort.

One hundred and twenty per cent for food prices means a new wave of labor unrest, rising manufacturing prices and certain inflation, that will lift the cost of the war by billions of dollars.

I am convinced there is no more patriotic group in America than our farmers. It is a shame to have them presented as grasping Shylocks by the so-called farm leaders. The action of the Senate bloc should be repudiated by American farmers.

Don't Waste Words

One of the best letters in my opinion that has recently appeared in The Post is the one signed by John C. Sheffield, entitled "Too Much Big Talk," to which radio commentators, column writers and other exhorters to vicarious valor might fittingly give heed.

Suggested slogan for future use: "If words will win the war, don't waste them.

If not, why waste them?"

Ditto goes also for V's for Wishbone, wishful thinking and the like.

OBSERVER.

Washington, Jan. 11.

Unjustified Criticism

I write to express my strong objection to the publishing of letters levying unjustified criticism upon branches of our armed forces during times like the present, especially when such criticism has no constructive value and apparently arises from some ingrown "hate" for the branch of the service which the writers of the letters have made the target of their castigation.

The type of criticism referred to is exemplified in the letter of Benjamin S. Howard, wherein our Navy Department, particularly its bureau heads called "the Navy bureaucracy, old-time gentlemen, educated for the sea" by Mr. Howard—are berated for not informing the public (our enemies as well, it seems) of the full extent of our losses at Pearl Harbor, and for not disclosing to one and all just what our Navy is doing.

Though I am well aware that this is a free country where every citizen is entitled to have his or her say, I feel that these outbursts from persons who, from the vantage points enjoyed by all "second-guessers" and "back-seat drivers," snipe at men laboring at their tasks of defending this country, would be better left unpublished. Particularly is this so when the writers of such accusations fail to justify their statements as constructive criticism by not offering a practical remedy for conditions they have criticized.

Cosmopolitan Center

I have read with interest the column of Merlo Pusey entitled "The Blackout Brings an Opportunity." Mr. Pusey explored the opportunity for community organization of the City of Washington.

I have been thinking of the opportunity offered Washington in this total emergency of becoming a worthy Capital of the great Nation which has justifiedly assumed the task of perpetuating the democratic way of life. This chance is offered by reason of the assembling in this city of thousands of intelligent Government workers from various sections of our immense country. If these workers bring to Washington only the most democratic of their attitudes and hold to them, these attitudes may spread by contagion until this city frees itself from the multiplicity of undemocratic attitudes and practices which, paradoxically, even in this crisis, characterizes it.

If the South is a section of gentle mannered people, may the Southerners who come here emanate courtesy and consideration everywhere toward all. If the West breeds men and women of sincerity and breadth of outlook, may those whom we welcome here never relinquish these qualities in an inclination to do as Washingtonians do when in Washington. If the Northerner is sophisticated or cultured, may he hold to these qualities, in spite of any influences toward provincialism and arrogance he may encounter here.

It would be regrettable, if Washington, the Capital, should emerge from this crisis more a creature of its geographical location than of the people who are living and working here. This is Washington's opportunity to develop a few characteristics of a cosmopolitan center, specifically, a cosmopolitan center in a democratic land.

A Newcomer Surveys Traffic

Now that the matter of transportation in the Nation's Capital is on the tapis it occurs to me to share with you, and with your readers if you see fit, certain views entertained by me on this subject. I have been living in Washington but six months and have therefore not had time to grow accustomed to the deficiencies and inconveniences impressed upon me at the initial impact.

At the base of these there appears to be a general disregard for the person not possessing a private vehicle, and only by overcoming this can a solution of Washington's transportation problems be hoped for.

Illogically, the pedestrian is always wrong, and Washington wonders why they die. The high powered automobile has the right-of-way, or assumes it, and the old rules of the road which give the right-of-way to the weaker vessel are reversed. The motorist tries to beat the light and either drives through it or fetches up with a jerk right on or just over the line, alarming and endangering pedestrians. While waiting for the light to change he registers impatience by racing his engine or by inching up on the tide of pedestrians menacingly, effectively preventing the timid from crossing. They round the corners with most of their weight on two wheels, they drive past stationary street cars, and they travel much too fast through the streets that are narrowed into little lanes by the closely parked cars on both sides, recklessly assuming the most obvious and the most awful risks.

There are streets which for many blocks offer the pedestrian no safe means of crossing, such as M Street approaching Wisconsin, and Wisconsin Avenue from M Street upward. There is a singular absence of lights and traffic officers, and the space reserved for streetcar passengers to wait in affords but the most narrow margin of safety; about 2 inches fore and aft for a corpulent person. The stream of cars thundering by on both sides is incessant, making it a problem of the first gravity for a pedestrian to reach the little space. There are many bus stops, too, like the one at Thirtieth and Q, where one may see little knots of anxious people trying to cross the street to catch a bus.

The streetcar and bus services are presumably operated under concessions, and either the terms of the concessions are very liberal or are being flouted by the concessionaires. Streetcar services are badly organized, inadequate and irregular. One may stand on Pennsylvania Avenue and observe a long procession of Potomac Park cars, mostly empty, and an occasional Friendship Heights car packed to overflowing. Of an evening or on a Sunday or a holiday, the streetcar services are so reduced as to be of little use at all. This is economy for the concessionaires, of course, but it is not service for the city that granted the concession. The obligation, contractual or at any rate moral, seems to be overlooked altogether. This little trick is employed by the bus concessionaires as well.

Bus operators overcrowd their buses dangerously, quite disregarding the little sign hanging just over their noses which specifies a very liberal maximum load. All who use the buses are familiar with the conductor's nasal: "Step right back in the bus, please; right back in the bus," when the bus is already carrying a 50 per cent overload. Many of these buses, by the way, have only a front exit.

The other day, in a great Middle Western city, an overcrowded bus was overtaken by an accident and caught fire. Obviously, the passengers could not escape. Many perished, burned to death. That city is now, for the moment, being a little strict about bus loads. Perhaps it will be necessary for Washington to go through such an experience to bring the responsible authorities to a sense of their obligations. The authorities must share with the concessionaires, of course, in such an event, the blame for such mass homicide.

As one stands, on any week day between 8 and 9 in the morning, waiting for a streetcar or a bus, a steady stream of private vehicles flows by, burning up the precious gas, each conveying a single passenger. The vast majority of these wasters have no need of a car; many live within easy walking distance of their places of business. It seems to be only a stupid vanity. Many cannot even afford cars, but they feel they are something their vanity requires. They do not have garages, and are permitted to clutter up the streets day and night, rendering the city hideous to the sight. Usually they cannot park them anywhere near their places of business, and thus are forced to walk the last bit in spite of all. They do not know the Nation is at war, and will only cooperate in economizing gasoline and rubber under severe compulsion.

These private cars, most of which have not the slightest raison d'etre, are a great public nuisance, a public danger in an emergency and a grave impediment to traffic at all times. The public interest is grossly sacrificed to the private interest, and it is certain that the streetcar, bus and taxi services would at least have a far better opportunity to satisfy the public were the streets less cluttered up with private cars.

The public transport services need more elbow room. The public needs better regulated streetcar service, more and better buses and better regulated bus services, and finally, it needs more taxicabs.

The Post Impressionist

Tired Car

Once upon a time we had a car with three spare tires! At the same time that we had the three spares (and the car), we also had another car with the usual one spare. That made two cars and four spares. And a one-car garage. And eight tires not counting the spares. I am making this inventory only to amaze myself—it's hard these days not to mutter to yourself about tires you have owned and not cherished.

Lest you get an impression of opulence from this list, let me hasten to explain that neither car was strictly desirable. What we called our "regular" car we had acquired late in life; that is, late in the life of the car—we ourselves were too young to care. It was a Ford coupe, just comfortable for two, with a rumble seat for groceries or friends (sometimes both).

The other car, the one with the three spares, was given to us. It was a large Buick, of uncertain vintage, at least to me.

Kathleen called me up one day.

"I'm tired of it," said she after a decent interval of polite exchanges.

"Tired of what?" quoth I.

"Oh, tired of people always wanting to give us their old cars. We've already got two. And along comes young Dick Smith saying please won't we have his car."

"Doesn't he want it any more?"

"Well, you see, he's being transferred to California and doesn't think the car can stand the trip. And he can't take time to sell it so he said please as a favor would we take it."

"For keeps?"

"Oh, yes, for keeps. Would you do me a favor and find someone who wants it?"

So, after looking at the car, we decided, as a special favor to Kathleen, to take it.

It had passed inspection, but it must have been on one of its good days. It had at least four while we owned it. There was really nothing wrong with the car. It was just tired, that's all.

Anyway, it was fun having two cars. On evenings when we planned to go out we had two decisions to make: first, where to go; and second, which car to take. If we cared whether we got there or not, we took our "regular" car. But when we felt the need of adventure, we took the Buick. In that event, transportation costs always included several nickels to telephone ahead our progress report or a final request not to wait for us.

Although the car was built to carry five people, it never did when we had it, for we found it best to carry all spares at all times. We had one spare on the tire rack and the spare spares in the back seat. Even if we had left the spare spares at home, there wouldn't have been room in the back seat for anyone to sit, because that's where we kept our spare parts as well.

By the time we finally disposed of the car, most of it was reposing on its own back seat. At every breakdown my husband came up triumphant with a part which he said the car was better without. And so saying, he threw the offending part into the back seat. And I must say that after each operation of this sort the car ran a little better.

My husband explained it to me very plausibly, I thought, by pointing out that like the human body, a car—this car, rather—had several vestigal organs and sometimes these parts became diseased or tired or something and then you had appendicostomies, tonsillotomies, and other varieties of surgery.

Some of the operations were startling. I leaned over one time to open the compartment on the dashboard and found the door of it suddenly dangling in my hand.

"Toss it on the back seat," said my husband evenly. So I did. And so we did, eventually, most of the knobs, pulls and gadgets adorning the interior. They simply came off in our hands, and we are not violent people. We like birds and bees and flowers and things, just to prove it.

The gayest party we ever attended was gay not directly because of the party, but because the latest trick of the Buick made us gay. After several flash bulletins from en route, we finally drew up at our hostess' door. Out of habit and not logic (for one of the back doors would no longer lock), my husband proceeded to lock the car and as he drew out the key, the entire lock and door handle neatly came out with it.

"Charlie Chaplin never thought of this one," he said, tossing lock, stock and barrel onto the back seat.

Far from being social pariahs for owning a dilapidated car, we were never more popular.

"Come to our party," people would say. "And bring the Buick."

However, shedding its lock was the last trick of the Buick with us. My husband decided to get rid of it.

"Can't even lock the thing any more," he gave as a reason.

Once having decided to dispose of the car, we discovered we had no title to the car. We could neither give it away nor sell it. Possession of the car had not been burdensome until we found that disposing of it might prove an insoluble problem. Kathleen could not recall just where in California her friend had gone so that we could write to him for the title. In my more frantic moments I could see a pile of junk slowly rusting through the years in our back yard while we combed California for Kathleen's friend. How long does it take for a car to rust to dust?

But we never had to find out, for Kathleen's friend turned up one day. He was glad to give us the title to the car.

"Anything!" he exclaimed, and we knew what he meant.

The man at the junk yard peered into the back seat.

"You want these tires?" he asked.

"Oh, no, you can have those, too," we said, with more magnificence than we realized then.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Mr. Nelson's Appointment

THE PRESIDENT has now charged Mr. Donald Nelson with a responsibility second in importance only to his own. The question is whether Mr. Nelson is also to be given authority equal to his great responsibility. Judging from the White House announcement, there is grave doubt whether he will be given the necessary authority.

LIPPMANN

FOR A WHILE the President may by his executive order delegate to Mr. Nelson various powers, and while he may declare that Mr. Nelson's "decision as to questions of procurement and production will be final," Mr. Nelson will be in the contradictory position of being the theoretical commander of a large number of officials who in fact outrank him. Though he is not to be a member of the Cabinet nor the head of a statutory Government department, in matters of procurement and production his decisions are supposed to be superior to those of members of the Cabinet.

Mr. Nelson's superior authority will rest on nothing more substantial, therefore, than the President's personal opinions, and this will inevitably mean—as we can see by the example of the controversy between Mr. Henderson and Secretary Wickard—that in spite of the announcement, it will be the President and not Mr. Nelson who makes the final decisions.

THAT THE PRESIDENT has meant to move forward a long way in the right direction is evident. But the conception of Mr. Nelson's office is at bottom as unsound and is crossed with the same fundamental defect as the conception of the other emergency offices. They are all of them like the moon, able to reflect light, and cold light at that, only when their faces are turned toward the sun. There is not enough energy in the White House to light up all the emergency satellites.

If Mr. Nelson is to have the authority which he is charged with in the advertisement, he will need the rank and the statutory position which his duties will require. His position will remain ambiguous, dependent upon the accidents of personal favor and personal access to the White House, unless his office is made by statute a department of government and he is given a full Cabinet rank.

Until that is done, it is misleading to say that Mr. Nelson's position will be comparable with that of Lord Beaverbrook, and it will be vain to pretend that the President has in fact set up a department of supply. Nor can the weakness of Mr. Nelson's position be remedied by inviting him to attend Cabinet meetings along with Mayor LaGuardia and other visitors from out of town. Mr. Nelson will not be able to do his work as it needs to be done unless he is a member of the Cabinet in his own right, on a footing of full equality of rank and title, of the flourishes and ruffles, with the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Commerce and the others.

ANY ONE who knows Washington, or for that matter any other capital, knows that rank, departmental pride, and bureaucratic resistance, are prime elements in the conduct of government; an outsider, which is what Mr. Nelson will continue to be, cannot push and finesse his way to "final decisions" that really stick, no matter how highly favored he may be by the White House. Washington today is full of men who are wearing themselves out wrestling with departmental inertia and vested bureaucratic interests because, having been given a big task to do, they have not been given the rank and the authority to do it.

Mr. Nelson has a task which requires that he should give orders to the procurement branches of the Army and the Navy, to loan establishments operated by Secretary Jones, to the Maritime Commission, to sections of the State Department, and to many agencies. He will, for example, have to have a lot to say about the specifications which the military services set, and probably also about their testing requirements: for it is generally known, I think, that some of the specifications have come down from an era where there was no shortage of anything. A great deal of rank and authority will be needed by Mr. Nelson if he is to deal with matters of this sort. He will need to outrank, legally, politically, symbolically, the procurement officials whom he is supposed to direct. Otherwise, on every knotty question an appeal will be taken to the President, and we shall be back where we started from—trying to conduct a total war from under one man's hat.

HOW UNSATISFACTORY it is to give men a job to do without giving them the tools has been demonstrated over and over again, rather vividly in recent days. One of the emergency offices recently set up was designed, so one gathered, to see to it that the Government information was correct and coherent. It is called the Office of Facts and Figures.

On Tuesday of this week, just when the country at large had begun dimly to realize the profound seriousness of the rubber situation, Secretary Jesse Jones issued an announcement which to the ordinary reader seemed to say that our worries are over and that there is going to be plenty of synthetic rubber, and that now we can all become complacent again. A few hours after the Jones announcement, an important representative of the automobile industry telephoned to a leading expert on rubber, saying how fine it was that that was settled!

AS A MATTER of fact, nothing is settled, and the rubber position is so desperately bad that much more drastic restrictions must be imposed, and Mr. Jones' synthetic rubber is not in sight, and only by a miracle can it all be produced, and even if it is produced, it will not be nearly enough. Now the point of the matter is that while it is, and has been, Mr. Jones' responsibility to prepare for the rubber shortage that any war in the Pacific was certain to entail, it is not Mr. Jones' business to speak out on a question of such critical importance, not knowing how his words will be understood by the people.

That surely is the business of the Office of Facts and Figures, to see to it that government announcements do not mislead the public. But how can a department of information which is not under someone of Cabinet rank expect to edit or even to be consulted about the press releases of a Cabinet officer?

THE PRESIDENT, with all his qualities, has never seemed to grasp the truth that great affairs cannot be conducted casually, by improvisation, and personally. And thus, though the appointment of Mr. Nelson is very promising indeed, it will be a mistake to accept it as a solution. The basic errors have not yet been corrected: they have not even been recognized clearly.

And since so much, indeed everything, is at stake on the success or failure of Mr. Nelson's work, there seems to be but one thing to do: to press on and to ask the President and Congress to take up immediately the project of putting a firm foundation under Mr. Nelson by creating a statutory Department of Supply with full Cabinet rank.

Japanese In S. A.

By Lawrence Griswold

Fisherman Spies

THERE HAS been a great deal written about the large German and Italian colonies in South America. Not so much, however, is known about the extensive Japanese settlements on the same continent.

Not as numerous, certainly, as the millions of Italian immigrants scattered over the east coast of South America from Venezuela to the Argentine, nor as important, politically, as the powerful German settlements in Rio Grande do Sul of Brazil or the Concepcion districts of Chile, the Japanese are potentially an equal—if not greater menace—to the security of the United States and its Latin American allies.

While many of the Germans and Italians settling the countries of South America are dissidents, or actual refugees from their national tyrannies, almost all of the Japs in those countries feel a personal grievance amounting to a hatred of the United States. When, in 1924, the Congress passed the Asiatic Exclusion Act, the rejection of all Jap migration left the surplus population of that prolific land without the haven previously provided by California and Oregon. They had to go somewhere else and, since even Hawaii—formerly so lenient—woul n't have them, the only countries left for unskilled laborers had standards of living little better than those at home.

NEVERTHELESS, swarms of Japanese began to arrive at lands set aside for them in Brazil, chiefly near the delta of the Amazon, Brazil, very close to bankruptcy at the end of the first World War invited the wholesale migration in the hope that unsettled areas along the Amazon might be made profitable through the culture of forest products native to the state of Para. Brazil had already lost the markets for her rubber but her scientists knew that a demand existed for babassu and other oil nuts which grew in wild profusion in the former rubber areas.

The Brazilians were disappointed. The average Jap simply went into truck farming, fishing and trading. Meanwhile, the Stevenson Rubber Restriction Act of 1926 which attempted to force up the price of Malayan rubber to American purchasers, had the effect of bringing Brazil back into the picture. Henry Ford bought vast areas of rubber lands just south of the Amazon and spent years in experimentation before establishing plantations at Boa Vista on the Tapajoz River. These trees will be in production by 1944 and constitute one of the greatest American hopes for a source of natural rubber.

Unfortunately, these plantations are close to the Jap settlements. Rubber trees require 20 years or more to reach maturity. If the Japs should determine upon a sudden raid to destroy these trees—it's not a difficult job—untold damage could be done to defense industries.

MEANWHILE, the second generation of Jap immigrants is growing up and beginning to produce a third. Bright young men are being trained in Brazilian universities and are reporting regularly to their consuls with their scraps of information. As to the actual population figures, there is no answer. No complete census has been taken. But estimates place them at about 125,000.

Both Ecuador and Peru are reluctant possessors of Jap colonies, both agricultural and fishing. Farm lands originally reserved for local Indians turn up, surprisingly, in Japanese hands. Fast ships churn the seas. Japanese traders undersell the local boys when it comes to dealing with the Indians and Japanese-made blowguns, spears and bows and arrows are passed on to the unwary tourist as strictly of forest origin. Much the same is true of Ecuador, but in this country the Jap trader manufactures the shrunken heads of the Jivaro Indians—out of monkeys—and bootlegs them to the fascinated traveler with no compunctions whatsoever.

Most of the foregoing paragraph is simply the surface picture of a rather ridiculous people completely out of their sphere. Unfortunately, there is a more serious aspect not so apparent. Everyone on the Pacific Coast of the United States as well as in the Panama Canal Zone has been conscious for years of the undercover movements of equally alien people. In San Diego, Los Angeles and San Francisco, exasperated watchers have reported that fast, well-equipped "fishing" boats that followed the fleet's movements; of the apparently stupid but well-meaning Japs with cameras which recorded important secret or routine maneuvers. Near the main anchorage of the Battle Fleet in Panama, and near the Fortified Islands, Jap boats were daily visitors with no conceivable purpose except that of espionage.

THESE PARTICULAR Japs are no longer around. They have been interned and their destroyer-like boats confiscated, or they fled on the morning of December 7. Too many of them accomplished the latter. It is more than probable that the bays and inlets of Lower California are refuges for long-range boats capable of performing acts of sabotage or simple espionage. In the islands off the Pacific coast of Latin America the same condition will probably hold true, from Cocos Island to the Galapagos, where Jap radio transmitters can relay to waiting submarines and airplane carriers the information picked up by agents, consular or private, on shore.

Nothing can prevent such espionage unless Latin America unanimously joins the United States in its war against the Axis. For only in wartime can governments round up and intern all enemy aliens within their frontiers. Even then the job will not be easy—thousands of the Japs are citizens of their adopted countries and there will be ways to transmit information concerning warships in part or in transit, of new air fields and fortifications under construction, of convoys en route with vital war materials.

The job of counterespionage will not be confined to the United States alone, but must inevitably spread to the extensive and less coordinated nations of Latin America and the Caribbean.

Negotiated Peace

By Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr.

The Army-Party Feud Myth

THE SPECTACULAR DISMISSAL of Gen. von Brauchitsch from command of the German armies in Russia was the opening gun of a new and dangerous propaganda blitzkrieg. For weeks experts have looked for a new German peace offensive. Sources which in the past have been unusually well informed now recognize in the Von Brauchitsch episode the first move of Hitler's new campaign in the psychological war.

Hitler's victories on the psychological front have been as important as the German military triumphs, and not the least of his successes, it is pointed out, comes from converting peace itself into a weapon of war. The peace offensive has been in the past worth many divisions for the Nazis. It serves as a strategy of confusion and dissension. It appeals to the men of goodwill and faint heart in every country, whose passion for peace blinds them to the bayonet beneath Hitler's scraps of paper.

The Nazis had originally hoped to divide the United States by well calculated offers of peace. After the larger demands of grand strategy compelled them to push Japan into the war, they revised their plans. They aim today to sow seeds of dissension among the ABCD powers, detaching them from Russia, if possible, and in general to create bewilderment and doubt of a kind which will paralyze an effective war effort.

THE GERMAN PLANS of a month ago had two alternatives, depending on the success of the Russian campaign. If the army had captured Moscow, Hitler intended to call a new Congress of Vienna. He would have summoned to it the signatories to the Anti-Comintern pact, the puppet states, and the remaining neutral countries of Europe. He then would most probably have declared the war at an end and would even have suggested a suspension of blockades by both sides. American public opinion was carefully prepared for this move by a series of dispatches in October and early November from Vichy, Berne and Stockholm, predicting a European conference. Hitler's innocent dupes and paid allies in the United States further promoted his plans by a concerted "negotiated peace" campaign in the same period. Significantly the newspaper articles and the campaign have stopped.

The European conference was killed by the failure to take Moscow. The Nazis today have turned to their second and far more ingenious scheme of a peace offensive. In politics as in war they are retreating to prepared positions.

As usual, they have taken care to "soften up" the United States for their new strategy. Recently the stories about the European conference have been superseded by another group of stories, all alike in pattern and character, apparently planted by the Nazi rumor corps on neutral correspondents in Stockholm and Berne. These stories have been variations on a single theme, and on a theme which the Nazis have hummed before: The alleged split between the Nazi Party and the German army.

For years the democracies have hoped for such a split. There may have been moments in the early years of Hitler's ascendancy when this would have been possible. But today the myth of the independent German army is one of the most sinister and dangerous weapons in the propaganda arsenal of Nazism. Systematically capitalizing on the well-known fact that in 1933 many of the German generals were anti-Nazi, the Wilhelmstrasse brain trust has deliberately groomed and coached certain generals for the role of "moderate elements" which might replace the Nazi regime. These generals, according to the best information, include Keitel, Reichenau, Brauchitsch, and possibly Bock. The first two of these are at least 200 per cent Nazi, having sold out to the party long before 1933. The other two stood with the party in its fights with the authentically conservative group in the army—the fight which ended briefly and bloodily with the murder of Gen. von Schleicher.

HITLER accomplished two ends by firing von Brauchitsch. He provided his people with a scapegoat for the Russian campaign, and he added fuel to the myth of the antagonism between the party and army. The Nazi intellectual panzer divisions have devoted much time and energy to popularizing this myth. They are building up to a situation when the Hitler victory drive begins to break and allied pressure increases. Then the army group, carefully nurtured as "moderates," will "persuade" the Fuhrer to retire to the Berghof, and will also arrange for the "withdrawal" of other prominent party leaders. A few old private scores may even be wiped out in blood to make the picture more realistic.

Civilian "moderates" will join the military cliques; such men as the slippery Hjalmar Schacht, beloved of big banking the world over; Count Schwerin von Krosigk, the present finance minister, a former Rhodes scholar, "gentlemanly and civilized;" and even Baron von Neurath, whose "humane" rule of Bohemia and Moravia was replaced, with such wide publicity, by the ruthless Heydrich. The figures will be gathered into a stooge government, whose facade of "conservatism" will be designed to appeal to former appeasers in Britain, former isolationists in the United States, and people with antidemocratic leanings everywhere. When the first enthusiasm for national unity dies down in this country, it is expected that some of the sponsors of the negotiated peace movement of November may begin to eulogize the "reliability" and "moderation" of the German army.

Following the current propaganda line, as it is industriously spread by Nazi agents in Berne and Stockholm, that the German army cannot be defeated, even if it cannot win, that it would rejoice at the overthrow of Hitler, and that therefore the generals are the only group with which peace can be made, the "Moderate" German front will propose terms which will be superficially plausible and generous. These may include evacuation of most of the conquered states, perhaps the restoration of Czech and even Austrian independence. In return, the army will ask for the retention of the Polish conquests, a free hand in eastern Europe and noninterference in the rule of Germany.

This is not only the strategy of Nazi psychological warfare. It is also consistent with the deep-rooted tradition of German militarism which has so often disturbed the peace of the world. As Prussia expanded into the German Empire, the power of the army grew also. It reached its highest point during the Hindenburg-Ludendorff rule of 1916-18. This period offers a cogent example of the military machine as a "peacemaker." The Treaty of Brest-Litovsk, dictated by the general staff, deprived Russia of 34 per cent of her population, 32 per cent of her agricultural land, 85 per cent of her beet sugar land, 54 per cent of her industry, and 89 per cent of her coal mines. In addition she was forced to pay as reparations six billion marks in goods, bonds and gold. This was the treaty which was described by the army-controlled German press as one of "understanding and conciliation." Hitler himself referred to it in Mein Kampf as one of "positively boundless humanity," and then went on to complain of the injustices of Versailles.

THE ALLIED VICTORY in 1918 sent the militaristic tradition into eclipse, not to destruction. Nursed and tended with sedulous care, the flame blazed up again in the Nazi revolution of 1933. The army entered into a blood brotherhood with the party when it openly condoned the purge of June 30, 1934, and later pledged its fidelity to Hitler on the death of Hindenburg.

Many among the generals have openly repented the errors of World War I, which temporarily deprived them of power. Chief among these they counted the failure of the army to insist on a negotiated peace after the defeat of the Marne, a peace which would have left the military machine intact, and with sufficient strength and influence to prepare for the next assault.

The mistake, they hoped, would not be made again, and they are bending their energies to prevent it. Hitler, conceiving the army as a smokescreen behind which the party can hide in case of need, favors the same policy. The respite of a year would give Germany invaluable time to recoup its strength. In the meantime the democracies would suffer a letdown. Factories, armies and morale would shift to a peace basis, and a sudden reversal of direction would be difficult. Peace can no more be negotiated with the army, in the opinion of experts on Nazi Germany, than with Hitler himself. The dictates of the militaristic tradition and of Nazi psychological warfare point to one end today: a phony peace, to be followed as soon as possible by another war. The only security for enduring peace lies in the total destruction of both the German army and the Nazi party.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Hearing Changes Tone

YOU OUGHT to know that our young friend, Mr. Sam Ballard, of Houma, La., received a very fair and courteous hearing from the august statesmen of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate when he went back Monday to renew his protest against the appointment of Herbert Christenberry, a veteran member of the unspeakable Huey Long mob, to the position of U. S. District Attorney in New Orleans. On Saturday the three statesmen of the subcommittee had roughed up our young friend as though he were a mildewed bum and more than slightly colored, and they were city detectives in the backroom of police headquarters in Memphis, Tenn., or Miami, Fla. Mr. Ballard, who soon will enter the U. S. Navy to fight for democracy, believed that as a citizen he had a right, indeed a civic duty, to present to Congress reasons why he believed the confirmation of Mr. Christenberry would constitute a blow at the honor of the Federal courts, which are a pillar of democracy, and that the statesmen had a civic and official duty to hear and even elicit information bearing on the inappropriateness of the nominee.

PEGLER

Being in his hither 20s, and flustered by his own conspicuousness, he appeared to be an inviting sucker for the traditional treat-'em-rough tactics of Senators. Most ordinary citizens feel like a little boy trying to give a speaking of the wreck of the Hesperus and are likely to go up in their lines when they face this ordeal and, even without heckling, are likely to do rather badly.

And it was so with young Mr. Ballard, too, except that when Senators O'Mahoney of Wyoming, McFarland of Arizona and Austin of New Hampshire began to bounce him around with sharp questions, loud and impatient comments and Senatorial finger-shakes, he reacted unexpectedly. Mr. Ballard held his temper, but with a politeness that might with advantage be adopted by Senators themselves in their dealings with citizens, and, with a dogged zeal for his rights, which might well be imitated by others, he insisted on pursuing his case.

ON MONDAY, when the case resumed, somehow, there was considerable press present to observe the treatment of young Mr. Ballard and whether he would be permitted to offer his witnesses and his facts. And, somehow, the three august Senators, who had been so impatient and sharp when it seemed that nobody was looking, were now as nice as pie and most helpful and legal and kind. The turnout of reporters and photographers could have had nothing to do with this, because it is well known that the press is without influence, so the change in demeanor might be explained by the fact that they had a good rest over Sunday.

Anyway, it was "Mister Ballard" this and "Mister Ballard" that, and Senator Austin, particularly, who had been distinctly on the grumpy side on Saturday, went out of his way to help Mr. Ballard develop what might be called the people's side.

The principal witness was O. John Rogge, late of the Department of Justice, who ran the prosecutions of the ribald thieves in the odoriferous double-dip case in New Orleans in which numerous close personal and political associates of Mr. Christenberry and of his sponsoring Senators, Ellenger and Overton, of Louisiana, were sent to prison, and he said he distinctly felt that the nominee's loyalty was given first to his political faction as against the D. of J.

Mr Christenberry, you understand, was an assistant U. S. D. A. in New Orleans at that time, and Mr. Rogge said he felt that someone on the local staff was tipping off grand jury matter to defendants and felt, moreover, "that it might have been Mr. Christenberry," whose brother, Earl, had been Huey Long's secretary and hand-in-glove with Senators Ellender and Overton in Louisiana gang politics. Herbert, himself, was hand-in-glove with them, too, and Mr. Rogge said that, believing Herbert "would place his political faction ahead of his duty to the Government," he could not recommend him for the post of U. S. D. A.

THERE was other testimony tending to show that Herbert had acted as a "dummy candidate," a political device which Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, in a previous inquiry, had denounced as "damnable" and vicious and corrupt, and that he had served Huey as eavesdropper against citizens by use of a dictaphone.

After the hearing Senator O'Mahoney sought out Mr. Ballard to say that he was a United States Senator and that his motives had been honorable, to which Mr. Ballard, looking him calmly in the eye, replied that he was a United States citizen whose motives were no less honorable.

Senator Connally came in to jollify the occasion which has started on a sour note, but his unhappy part was writtten years ago by the moving finger which, having writ, moves on. Discovering fraud in the election by which Overton reached the Senate, Mr. Connally, nevertheless, suggested that this wise but naive man had had no knowledge of the fraud, and that is in the record, nor all his piety nor wit shall lure it back.

The Once Over

Tire Crisis

Q.—Is it all right to take a bicycle tire and try to inflate it so it will do for an auto?

A.—Yes, but why be so silly?

Q.—Is the milkman entitled to a new tire under any circumstances?

A.—No. If the cow can produce the milk with all it has to contend with, the milkman ought to be able to deliver it with or without tires.

Q.—Can a taxi get a new tire?

A.—No. The ride is just as rough, with or without tires.

* * * *

Q.—Can a horse van get new tires?

A.—No. Any horse should be patriotic enough to be willing to get out and walk.

Q.—Is a coal truck entitled to new tires to deliver coal?

A.—Yes, but we are gonna watch it to see that it don't deliver tires.

Q.—If cars delivering telegrams are not entitled to new tires, how can the company get wires through to rural folks with no phones?

A.—Any organization that could think up the singing telegram idea and put it over can do something based on the idea of a dogsled.

Q.—Is a lady hurrying to a bridge for the Red Cross entitled to a tire if one of hers blows out?

A.—No, but we hope we don't have to argue it out with her.

* * * *

Q.—Is a lady who used a limousine to take her poodle for a ride in the park eligible for tires?

A.—No, and the dog would be the first to admit it in this crisis.

Q.—Is a baker who has a blowout while delivering an order of hot mince pies entitled to new rubber?

A.—No, but it's a pretty sad case.

Q.—Is a mayor bound by auto on a speaking tour to urge rubber economy entitled to a new tire?

A.—We were afraid somebody would bring that up.

Q.—Is a boy who has taken his old man's car out without permission and blown out two tires entitled to new ones?

A.—No, but we have a deep feeling for the kid's plight.

Q.—If a medical student just about to start practice finds his tires are no good just as he is about to open an office can he get any consideration?

A.—No; to save time he had better change the sign to "Dental Work" and stay in one spot.

Q.—Is the man who fixes the oil burner in an emergency entitled to tires?

A.—If he isn't there will be the devil to pay.

* * * *

Q.—Is the ash collector entitled to new tires?

A.—The ashman has been traveling on flats so long he wouldn't feel right using good rubber.

Q.—If a man who is delivering vegetables calls to apply for new tires at the same moment that a man who delivers meat calls, which gets the preference?

A.—In this case we would give tires to anynody who offered to deliver vegetable soup.

New York barbers now have to have a license. This makes it proper for any customer to demand "Let me see your operating license before you start cutting."

And then there is the woman who, in buying defense bonds through the department store, asks "What colors have you?" and "Have you any types that won't be too common?" Not to forget the shopper who wants to know if defense stamps can be sent her on approval.

Elmer Twitchell is quite a growler. He complains that he just had to drive into town on flat tires, using a borrowed car, to buy some sugar which he couldn't get.

Contract Is Let For Bluestone Dam

Huntington, W. Va., Jan. 14 (AP).—The Dravo Corporation, subject only to final approval of its bid by the judge advocate general's office, will construct the Bluestone flood control and hydroelectric power dam on the New River near Hinton.

Army Engineers at Washington today announced award of the contract to the Pittsburgh firm on its estimate of $11,376,080 for the work, exclusive of sluice gates and hydroelectric power equipment, which are expected to increase the eventual cost of the project to 22 million dollars.

Progress Forces Jake Hayes From Hilltop Where His Folks Have Lived 75 Years

His Spot of Land Now Becoming University Terrace

By Edward H. Lawson

Jake has gone away.

For more than three quarters of a century there had been a Jake Hayes on St. Philip's Hill. Yesterday brought this rustic symphony of hilltop existence to an end.

On the northernmost extension of a lap of land just west of Foxhall Road, where Little Falls Road has been rechristened "Loughborough," and where Fort Drive comes down Nebraska Avenue through Fort Kemble Park in an imaginary line—Jake had spent most of his lifetime.

The elder Jake lived there before him, when "Tunlaw" Road was spelled—in reverse—"W-a-l-n-u-t"—and the ancient trees of the modern New Mexico Avenue bore black walnuts in profusion.

This lap of land, once Dana Place extended, is now rapidly being converted by steam shovel into University Terrace. It is at the apex of a triangle, with lovely Spring Valley to the north, Wesley Heights to the east, and Kent and Briarcliff to the westward.

Quietest Place in Capital

Jake's cottage, until the terrace came through, was in No-Man's Land, a mere acreage, without water or sewer, electricity or gas, but with all of Nature's visible forms in virgin state, surrounded by the "garden spots of Washington."

Known to some as Honeymoon Hill, or Coakley Cove, and adjacent to Hayes Krest and Longview, it was the quietest place in the Nation's Capital. Raid wardens, before the highway extension began, in the absence of street lighting, would have called it, in the night season, the most complete blackout hereabouts.

There Jake lived, a neighbor to the Stotesburys, the Easby-Smiths, the Trowbridges, the Raymond Clappers and the Percy Russells, in his neatly painted cottage, with its rustic porch and arboretum at the entrance, and red oaks, majestic in the bottomland that sloped off behind.

Jake Sank a Well

Once there was a far-famed spring on the place, until the Health Department sealed it up because mansions nearby had resorted to septic tanks in absence of necessary sewerage. Then Jake sank a well, away down, through pebble-rock, and kept his butter and eggs and lard—and beverages, perhaps, in the cool refrigeration of its subterranean depths.

Though Jake's cottage has gone to the wreckers, through condemnation, and the red rooster and brown hen are no more, the old well is still there, and the grindstone and the rain barrel, while swallows and twin-motored planes circle overhead.

No signs remain of the adjacent site of the private zoo of the late Victor Evans, which was maintained, with all sorts of rare animals which roamed the hillsides, awoke the echoes of morning with their cries and came to water in the creek that bordered Jake's farm, its ripple now underground and forgotten.

These animals were donated by Evans to various zoological gardens a quarter century since, and the offspring of some of them may be found today in our several national parks. Until a scant 12 months ago, their animal houses, built in the neighboring trees, still swayed back and forth with the breeze.

Very definitely, not they, but the Analostan and Monacan Indians placed the totem poles in the nearby woods where a marker of the Coast and Geodetic Survey indicates the highest point in west Washington.

Back in the nineties, at the urge of the District of Columbia engineer, Jake succumbed to the gold fever, and made his way, banjo in hand, up through the Yukon to the region of the Klondike, where he staked his claim. This claim—if it can be located—he is willing to sell to Uncle Sam as a secret airport site to be used by the land-based bombers that must humble Tokyo.

Jake Hayes and the late Jennie Hayes and their dog, Callie, before the terrace was built. In upper picture, the old well at the Hayes house is all that is left intact. A modern residence shows in the background

But Weaver Street, and University Terrace, and Cathedral Avenue, and Klingle Street must be opened up, and a large part of the woodland and agricultural haven that Jake has occupied through all these years, has gone with the wind, and the topsoil therefrom is being shifted to the Dalecarlia project.

And Jake has gone away.

With his condemnation money he has bought for cash a new home on River Road just over the District Line. The house which he bought was occupied by two tenants, one of whom has been required to move. Jake had to delay his own moving until the tenant gave him occupancy, and this situation put the new terrace on a "seesaw" from Thanksgiving until now.

A well-known attorney and realtor, at the farther end of the terrace, had just completed a $50,000 mansion, the land in front of which had to be graded.

Jake, whose cottage was in the line of grading, held the other terrace end. He promised himself that he would hold it until he had harvested his vegetable crop and cut his winter wood and had his Thanksgiving dinner.

But, when his faithful helpmate, Jennie, expired suddenly after dinner on Thanksgiving Day, Jake made up his mind that he would have Christmas in the old place the same as if she were there.

All the Commissioners' horses, and all their men, were called on to make Jake quit, so that the terrace might be steam-shoveled through. As high as the roof of the new $50,000 mansion, before its front door, was a hump of hill from which, at sunset, Washington's noblest view, up the valley of the Potomac, was offered. That hill had to be cut down so that the mansion might be entered. But there was Jake, at the other end, holding up the excavating machinery, with the Sign of the Cross and the Spirit of Silent Night.

His time of departure was extended by the department of highways to Christmas Eve. Jake had no calendar.

Came New Year's Day. The blue-gray smoke still curled from the bricktop chimney of Jake's cottage.

Time marched on. Jake maneuvered a masterful delaying action. But now, definitely, the highway department's communique indicates that Jake has evacuated. He has folded his tent like the Arabs—at least until spring comes through—when Coakley Cove, and Jake, and the corn-planting season, and the new terrace, and the old oaken bucket, may again have a rendezvous on St. Philip's Hill, in that fair section which, oddly enough, the surveyors call "St. Philip and Jacob."

Defense Workers Ride To Work by Automobile

New York (INS).—Workers in increasing numbers are using the highways to commute to the job by automobile, reports the American Petroleum Institute.

Eighty-two per cent of all the workers in Youngstown, Ohio, a steel center, drive to work in their own cars or ride with fellow workers. In Midland, Mich., a chemical center, the figure is 82 per cent, and in Glendale, Calif., an aircraft center, it is 87 per cent.

Milk Crusader Sees Victory

Carlos C. Van Leer, a truly amazing man, is in process of believing that the tables are about to be turned on all those scoffers who have told him his ideas about powdered, separated milk are cockeyed.

"Eveybody has thought me crazy," he says. "Now, enough interest in my plan has grown up that I'm pretty sure a Congressional committee will call me soon to explain it."

This plan, specifically, is to make available to babies and the armed forces the 22 billion quarts of separated milk which Van Leer says go annually to animals and sewers. ("Separated" milk is what the public knows as "skim" milk, but the latter term is castor oil in Van Leer's mouth.) He would have it converted into powdered form and put on the market.

"People say separated milk is a dull subject," Van Leer says. "Why, separated milk is such a food as the world has never seen. It's going to bring teeth into children. It's going to fight all over the world. No, sir; it's not dull!"

This matter of fighting all over the world is the one thing that seems to have given the big chance to this lean, 34-year-old lone wolf campaigner.

He believes he can convince a Congressional committee of the value to the Army of powdered separated milk, which is an easily carried food substance in the field.

If his idea does bear fruit now it will be a rich climax to more than a year's feverish campaign to stop "wastage" of separated milk, whose nutritive value Van Leer vigorously acclaims.

His campaign has been like an ant trying to argue with an Army tank. "Everyone thought I was either lobbying for someone or was a crank," he said.

It finally came out that Van Leer, who lives at 4712 Dover Road, Brookdale, Md., really didn't want anything for himself. His campaign started after he began searching around for a cheaper milk for his own family and found out about the separated milk being wasted.

He had a $90,000 sum he had made in the securities market, so he dropped everything and started his efforts to use the milk for human beings instead of using 100 pounds of it, for example, to increase the weight of a chicken by 2 pounds.

A prophet's zeal has been his. He has spent several thousand dollars from his own pocket. In the interest of his campaign, he even hitchhiked to New York, something that even a prophet has never been recorded as doing.

Such acts as these might dumbfound his old pals of Yale University days, including Rudy Vallee, in whose Yale band he played an E flat alto horn. But all his endeavors are coming out in the wash, Van Leer now believes.

Wooden Overcoat No Joke to Swiss

Bern, Switzerland (AP).—Artificial wool from wood is winning a place in Swiss economic life that it may not relinquish after the war.

Like the rest of blockaded Europe, Switzerland has turned to substitutes for the wool and cotton it no longer receives from overseas. Its production of wool from wood now totals 30 tons daily—still a long way from the country's normal daily wool and cotton consumption of 135 tons, but more plants are being built.

Swiss industrialists have expressed the belief that the industry, once established, will continue after the war.

Synthetic Rubber, Hemisphere Plants Looked Upon to Save Situation for U. S.

Rubber supplies must stretch like rubber itself. This was forcibly brought home to American motorists with the recent rationing regulations for automoile tires. The United States is the greatest consumer of rubber in the world.

"British Malaya and the Netherlands East Indies long have been the United States' chief source of rubber, with large shipments also from the island of Ceylon, French Indo-China, and other Eastern sources," says a bulletin from the National Geographic Society.

When Supply Runs Low

"In 1940 British Malaya shipped to the United States more than 471,000 tons of rubber. From the Netherlands Indies came more than 322,000 tons, and 61,600 tons from Ceylon.

"Since most of the rubber imported goes into automobile tires, it is generally believed that, with tire rationing, the United States may be able to take care of its wartime needs, even if supplies from the East are stopped.

"In the period of time that must elapse between the exhaustion of the country's present supply of natural and reclaimed rubber, and an adequate supply from expanding production in Central and South America, either synthetic or guayule rubber, or both, must be relied upon to supplement limited imports of natural rubber.

"Guayule rubber, the natural stopgap in supplying the United States need, is made from the desert shrub of that name which grows wild in Mexico and in the Big Bend area of Texas. Two thousand tons of this rubber were supplied United States manufacturers in 1940.

"Guayule now is being grown experimentally in the Salinas Valley in California, and other areas in the Southwest have been suggested as possible growing areas.

"For best economic results, guayule rubber should be extracted from shrubs about 4 years old. One-year-old plants will supply rubber, but at a greater unit cost. Superior strains of guayule and advanced methods of cultivation also increase the rubber yield. To promote rubber production legislation, now pending, provides for the planting of 45,000 acres in guayule and for the establishment of extracting facilities, at Federal expense.

12 Countries Enlisted

"With the belief that there are millions of acres in tropical America suited to growing rubber, Congress authorized a survey, begun in 1940, to determine the most promising rubber producing areas between Veracruz, Mexico, and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The East has had 8 million acres in rubber.

"The United States Government and 12 Latin American countries cooperated in the planting of more than 10 million seeds last year. In addition some 5 million seeds were planted by United States commercial interests. Seeds have been planted in nurseries from Mexico to Peru. Tapping may begin when trees are four to five years old. Good budded strains that are high yielding and disease-resistant are being introduced. These include thousands of budded trees from the Philippines. An increased yield is counted on to offset the labor advantages of the Far East, where the seedling trees are low-yielding, and to put American producers on a competitive footing after the war.

"The Department of Agriculture has estimated that rubber can be produced in tropical America at half the cost of synthetic rubber, guayule rubber, goldenrod rubber or other substitutes, even with large scale production of the latter.

"Of the more than 900,000 tons of rubber imported into the United States in 1940, Africa supplied but 3668 tons, and 8318 tons came from Central and South American countries This 1940 import figure is far above normal. A more extended use of reclaimed rubber is also counted on to extend the use of the present supply."

Maybe He's Lucky It Wasn't Marble Cake!

Rock Springs, Wyo. (AP).—A one-point landing on a chocolate cake probably saved Walter Lietz, of Rock Springs, from more serious injury than a "rosted pate in an automobile accident near here.

The Lietz car rolled over twice when a tire blew out.

"Are you hurt?" inquired Mrs. Lietz as she and her husband gingerly tested themselves for injuries after crawling clear.

"My head feels funny," said Lietz, reaching to remove his hat. "It's gummy!"

His hat was gone, but there was a covering on his head.

"Looks like some of the upholstery," said Mrs. Lietz, inspecting it.

"I think it's that insulation material I bought recently," Lietz speculated.

Then Mrs. Lietz gasped, peered into the back of the car and groaned.

Lietz's halo was the chocolate frosting of the home-made cake that had been on the back seat when the upset occurred.

RED CEDAR SHINGLES

 * * for War Housing, Repairs, Remodeling and Farm Building!

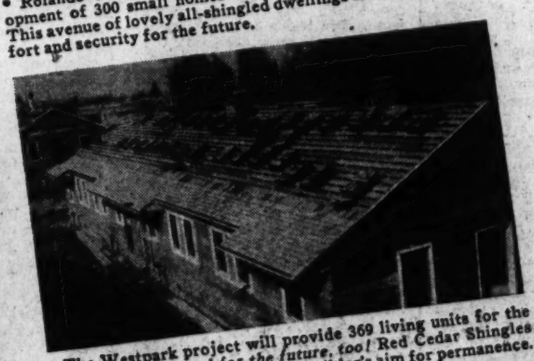
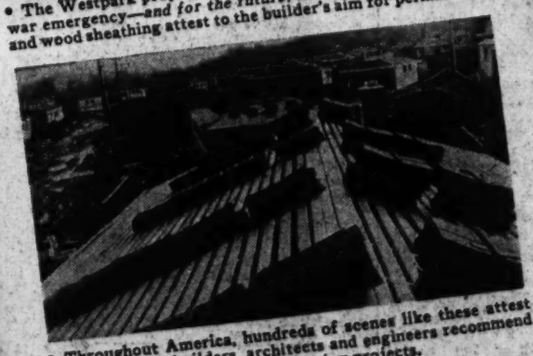
• Rolando Village is a typically beautiful war housing development of 300 small homes—all roofed with wood shingles. This avenue of lovely all-shingled dwellings looks out on comfort and security for the future.



• The Westpark project will provide 369 living units for the war emergency—and for the future, too! Red Cedar Shingles and wood sheathing attest to the builder's aim for permanence.



• Throughout America, hundreds of scenes like these attest to the fact that builders, architects and engineers recommend Red Cedar Shingles for War Housing projects.

ECONOMY No other roof or sidewall material has the economic advantages of Red Cedar Shingles. Figured by their many years of service, they cost less per square than any other material.

COMFORT A greatly magnified cross-section of a Red Cedar Shingle shows millions of insulating cells in every cubic inch. Heat loss through a Red Cedar Shingle roof is negligible, as demonstrated by the fact that snow and heavy frost will melt more slowly on roofs of this material. During the summer months this same insulating quality wards off the sun's heat. The clatter of hailstones and heavy rain is minimized on a roof of Red Cedar Shingles.

LONG LIFE Experiments made in the U. S. Forest Products Laboratories have disclosed in Red Cedar Shingles natural preservative oils. These are highly toxic to wood-attacking fungi and account for the fact that Red Cedar Shingles are highly resistant to decay. Another authority credits Red Cedar Shingles with "great durability under all sorts of exposure."

PROTECTION The best defense against weather for houses, for barns and for storage sheds is provided by Red Cedar Shingles. No less than three layers of shingles exist throughout a roof applied according to the established method. This triple-ply covering creates a "bridging" effect which resists hail, wind, earthquake and hurricane.

NON-CRITICAL Not classified among the hard-to-get "critical" defense materials, Red Cedar Shingles are readily available.

BLUEPRINTS FREE!

Government officials, contractors and others interested in building material specifications may obtain a complete set of architectural blueprints illustrating the application methods for Red Cedar Shingle roofs and sidewalls—and they are absolutely free.

Hats for the 'Suit Woman' Show Feminine Detail

With the advent of war and emphasis on suits for spring, the softly tailored hat that covers the head comes to the fore. Distinctive detailing distinguishes these new sports hats from the severe mannish shapes that grew out of World War I. Both crowns and brims are of variegated shapes and sizes—visors that tilt over the eyes, small sailors, large off-the-face models, tiny pompadour sizes, indented brims, crushed or elevated crowns. While the tailored hat is in the lead, especially for suits, utterly feminine concoctions with froths of veiling and clusters of flowers are offering stiff competition for off-duty, frivolous hours

The well-dressed woman's fromula for facing spring with aplomb is to have a good tailored suit and a classic sports hat. This classic tailleur hat, by Knox (left), has a dipped brim with vertical indentations for softness, elevated crown. It is trimmed with a flat ribbon bow and band

A visor brim with "jockey" neatness, turned up perkily in the back gives definite chic to this "dutiful" tailored hat (right) with its unique four-cornered block crown. Created by Knox for the spring suit, it comes in luscious pastel shades as well as in the dark, practical ones

Uniform Craze Among Women Going Too Far, Say Designers

WOMEN'S craze for uniforms has aroused fashion designers to issue warning against regimentation in dress. Opposing the uniforms-at-all-times advocates, the fashion leaders are urging that the uniform be donned only when "safety requires." The United Press reports the stand of the designers as follows:

"Uniforms for women should be forbidden, except in case of absolute necessity," said Designer Louise Barnes Gallagher, who has been making women look alluring for 17 years and feels deeply about it.

"Uniforms aren't feminine, which is the worst I can say about them. They are extravagant and silly. Why should a woman buy a uniform when she has plenty of good clothes to wear, right now when materials are scarce?

"A woman's efficiency as an air raid warden isn't increased by a dowdy outfit that makes her look like something out of an old-fashioned orphanage.

"Nurses, women truck drivers, factory workers and some others need uniforms, of course. But no woman needs a uniform to take down notes in a first aid class."

"A woman's appearance is her most valuable contribution to national defense," said Designer Peg Newton.

"A woman can't succeed at anything unless her self-esteem is intact. That depends on her appearance. She feels and acts efficient when she knows her clothes are smart and becoming, and above all, flattering.

"Men don't like to see women ape them. They like a contrast. Soldiers see nothing but uniforms all day. When they have a few minutes for recreation they want their woman companion to be as appealing and feminine as possible."

The current enthusiasm among women for gay colors, in the pastel shades, the designers said, was a sign women understand their function as the decorative side of the human race.

"The craze for uniforms won't last," they said.

Their best advice to women who want to enhance their allure, on a budget nicked by taxes and defense bonds and with materials curtailed by priorities, was:

1. Buy a good basic costume, something on classical lines, of good material, to last for the duration.
2. Enliven it with gay gadgets and accessories.
3. Keep the pressing board handy so the frock is always at its best.
4. Pay special attention to grooming details—learn to do hair and hands at home.

Children in Wartime

The Boy Who Is Thrilled With the War

This is one of a series of parents' questions answered by the Child Study Association of America in its booklet, "Children in Wartime."

My 11-year-old son seems delighted at the war. His walls are full of maps; he gets the news eagerly. He and his friends talk constantly about going out and "blasting Hitler." "Just my luck," he says, "to live where there's no fighting. Boy! Would I love to have an air raid!" I find it hard to believe he is really so bloodthirsty. Is there anything I ought to do about it?

Remember that there is invariably a thrill at the thought of real danger. It would be less than human not to be excited and stimulated. In many children the love of adventure is very strong and quite natural and is not as "bloodthirsty" as it seems. The sight of the aggressive primitive male animal, when he happens to be our own son, is likely to shock his mother, though not his father. But your son is not abnormal, and the kinds of feelings he is expressing are for very many—both younger and older—certainly natural right now.

Man's Bachelor Parties During Wife's Absence Result in Damaged Furniture, Whispered Comment, And Missing Possessions; Should She Protest?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a long-time wife and the mother of grown children. Recently I was away from home for some days, on a combined business and pleasure trip. During my absence, my husband entertained business friends and associates, including two young women employes, in our home. Our home has been acquired by long years of planning and self-denial and I am very proud and careful of all my possessions.

On returning home, I was surprised to learn that these two young women,—with whom I am not acquainted,—had prepared supper for the party, and, due to carelessness, had permanently damaged an expensive and otherwise perfect piece of furniture. But the crowning blow came when I discovered that my husband had given them some of my possessions,—including a half-dozen English cups and saucers which had been a gift to me; and which I had hoped to make part of a collection.

The above-mentioned festivity and others in which one of these women employes figured prominently,—plus the fact that she came alone with my husband to our home following a Sunday morning horseback ride,—has caused comment by my friends and our business acquaintances. And this sort of thing is new in my experience. I have always been very proud of my family.

My questions are these: Should I dismiss the entire affair, on the assumption that the woman's behavior was motivated by a desire to advance herself in business, and simply used poor judgment in violating the ethics of good business and social behavior? Am I being childish and ungenerous in feeling hurt and resentful over my lost "possessions?" And in having my home abused in my absence? I am in a fog, and more distressed than my letter may indicate. Sincerely, Y. T. R.

Wife Should Apply Brakes to Situation

DEAR Y. T. R.: I think a little wifely hell-raising is called for in this instance, for the purpose of putting the brakes on an obviously rather unscrupulous young woman's efforts to play your husband for a sucker. You would be showing the white feather—and promoting her game, whatever it may be—in unprotestingly accepting the vexatious consequences of the "field day" she enjoyed during your absence from home.

The lady's polite theft (for such it amounts to), of your prized cups and saucers affords overt justification for "going to the mat" about the whole business. Undoubtedly she jumped at the chance to "sweet talk" your husband out of them, when he was, for the nonce, "not quite himself," as a result of being either emotionally or alcoholically intoxicated (or both).

One can imagine her billing and cooing over their quaint appeal; and one can also imagine that your husband, in rising to the bait and urging her to take them, hadn't the faintest notion of how much value—cash, curio, or sentimental—you attached to them. He may even have thought you would never miss them; inasmuch as it is likely that he himself had never given them a "seeing" glance before. In other words, I am sure that, in giving her the china, he had no idea he was letting her make off with one of your dearest possessions; and the same goes, of course, for such other items as she (or her friend) toted away.

Granted that your husband's bachelor entertaining sent up quite a bit of smoke, that had neighbors and confreres viewing with wonder,—still, I think it wise to refrain from carping emphasis on that particular phase of the episode. After all, it is fair-minded to assume that he was jestingly high-pressured by office associates into "throwing a party," which then led to others,—and so, in a sense, was as much victimized by your absence as by his so-called "friends'" selfishness.

The grievances you may legitimately emphasize and protest are (1) the "abuse" to which your home was subjected and (2) your feeling of outrage at having been frivolously (and meanly) dispossessed of certain small treasures—but especially the china. Which chins, you may firmly say, it is now your purpose to recover—if such can be done without too heavily penalizing him. There is your opening wedge for taking stock of the lady who made the haul.

Tell your husband you DO want the china back ("never mind the other things") and you believe if the girl understood just why it means so much to you,—because it was a gift, for one thing; and you treasured it as the nucleus of a planned collection, for another thing,—she would gladly return it. And because you are sure of this, you are going to write her a nice little note, explaining your feelings, and ask her to cooperate in redressing the mistake.

Say to him, in effect: "That is, if you don't mind. Of course, if she is an invaluable member of your staff, who might take offense and walk out in a huff, leaving you stranded, if I asked for my china—I shall let the matter drop, for your sake. But if she is just a little dumbbell 'on the make'—and it looks that way from here—I shouldn't think you'd consider her feelings before mine."

In thus "making issue" of the ching, you will be indirectly "making issue" of the girl as well,—forcing him to voice sentiments concerning the one that apply to the other. If it develops that he insists on protecting the girl's feelings at the expense of yours, in this instance,—or sheepishly insists you would be making him "look like a fool,"—don't worry the dispute to the point of violent quarrel; but on the other hand, don't conceal your displeasure and sense of injury, either.

Tell him with some emotion and vehemence how much you treasure every little household article acquired through the years, and how proud you have always been of him, and what a blow it has been to come back from this trip and find everything "messed up," even including his reputation, to some extent. Say, "What on earth came over you, John? Well, I've learned my lesson. I'm never going away without you again. And as for that little snip who made off with my cups and saucers—she'd better keep out of my way with them, or I'll break every last piece over her head. Now, what do you think we'd better do about that damaged chair——?"

P. S.: In the happy event that your husband doesn't seriously object to your asking for the china back, send the girl a note of the type suggested above. It will (1) convey a stinging, deserved rebuke; (2) may bring the desired results; and (3) should give her to think twice before poaching on your preserves again. M. H.

Normal Lives For Children In War Urged

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

"KEEP THE home fires burning"—this is constantly being reiterated at defense headquarters as the women's chief role in the national emergency. Naturally we must contribute our efforts to actual war work. But we must remember, too, that our children must be given as nearly normal a life during this crisis as possible, and that the usual business of the Nation must be kept going in order to avoid an industrial paralysis that will be as hard to recover from as war itself. So in these dark days we turn a doubly attentive ear to the women at home who are trying to carry on.

Mrs. J. T. K. writes: "A line from you with regard to my furnishing problem will save me from having to live with mistakes in selections. We have just bought new living-room furniture and I want to add a rug and draperies. The sofa is covered in a raspberry brocatelle, the wing chair in beige with figures in deep red and green, the other chair in solid green."

What about a beige rug and beige walls of the same shade? Then draperies of a vibrant figured material on a beige ground. Use deep red and deep green accessories and highlight with pewter or silver.

Mrs. W. R. writes: "We are building a new house and I must decide on colors for the walls. Should all the downstairs rooms harmonize or match?

The walls of the downstairs rooms don't have to match, but in a small house the effect is usually more spacious if they do.

Eye Exercises Aid Beauty

Hollywood, Calif.—When new composite pictures are made of the ideal movie star, Georgia Carroll will furnish the eyes. They are greenish-blue, large and lustrous and will be seen next in the Warner Bros. film, "You're in the Army Now."

Georgia reveals that her secret is "plenty of sleep, exercises and and cleanliness."

She always has at least eight hours of sleep and wears black velvet "blinkers" if any bright light shines into her room. Frequently during the day she closes her eyes, counts 100, then opens them and focuses on some distant object for another long count. It's the best of optic exercises. Before going out at night, she relaxes her eyes with warm and cold compresses.

High Cost of Protective Foods Called Barrier to Nutrition

By Ida Jean Kain

THE TYPE of letter that upsets me is the one from the homemaker who is not only willing but eager to apply the science of nutrition to her family's menus and who cannot afford the protective foods in the amounts recommended. I hope that our Government will step in—and promptly—and will curtail the rise in prices on these foods. Let the luxuries soar. We can get along without them. We cannot get along without good nutrition.

The only way I can answer these letters is to suggest low cost fruits, vegetables, meats and whole grains that put balance in the diet without putting a strain on the budget. In the line of vegetables, you get the most for your money in the green and yellow vegetables like Swiss chard, beet greens, spinach, carrots and sweet potatoes. All are high in vitamins and minerals.

Soybean a Comer

Other vegetables extremely valuable in the diet are beans, peas and lentils, and white potatoes. Soybeans are not yet widely used in our country but they are such a rich source of the protective elements that they are bound to be used more and more. Navy beans, a good old American dish, furnish protein, iron and calcium, and are both good and inexpensive. Potatoes should be used daily in the low cost menus and to retain their highest nutritive value should be either baked or boiled in their skins. Starch foods such as spaghetti, macaroni, noodle and rice should be counted as cereals, not vegetables!

Since the Vitamin C foods—oranges, grapefruit and tomatoes—sometimes come high, more raw foods should be included to assure adequate amounts of this vitamin. Excellent sources are cabbage, green pepper, parsley, apple and celery salad, cabbage and pineapple salad and all kinds of greens.

It is economical nutrition to serve salt water fish such as salmon (canned pink salmon is as good as the red), herring and mackerel. And meat organs—beef liver, kidneys, heart or brains—should be put on the menu at least once a week.

Watch Vitamin B

To be sure of getting enough Vitamin B, every particle of bread and cereal should be either whole grain or enriched. Dark rye bread and 100 per cent whole wheat bread are good buys. And rolled oats, cracked wheat or ground corn meal can be counted on to supply protection.

When evaporated milk is substituted for whole milk, count one pint as having the same food value as a quart of fresh milk. Also, one-fourth pound of dry skim milk and one-third pound of cheese each furnish the nutrition equivalent of one quart of fresh milk.

If you buy a butter substitute, make sure that it is a brand which has been enriched with Vitamin A. As far as the calories go, it counts the same as butter.

During the winter months, children must have some source of Vitamin D. Cod-liver oil is the cheapest.

Spectator Ensemble

Hollywood, Calif.—Everyone is gleaning future fashion knowledge from one costume Priscilla Lane is wearing in "Arsenic and Old Lace." With all her clothes of the smart-spectator type, this ensemble is no exception even though it does include a draped skirt. As it lines up from top to toe, there's a white slip-on sweater, calf-length draped black wool skirt, black spectator felt hat and black accessories. Priscilla also wears a striking sports necklace of red and black ceramics.

Jelleff's—Daylight Fur Salon, Third Floor

Capital Whirl

by Hope Ridings Miller

If you've been wondering who plans Mme. Espil's wardrobe (with a view, of course, toward consulting the same designer yourself), here's your answer . . . but I'm afraid it won't help you very much. She does it herself. Very hurriedly, she says, and without too much thought as to what the final effect will be.

Yet, the effect, as practically anybody in Washington will tell you, leaves nothing to be desired. At least, it didn't yesterday, when Mme. Espil received a few friends at 5 o'clock. The occasion was a musicale at which 21-year-old Marisa Regules played the piano for three-quarters of an hour to the delight of everybody present, but I'd be willing to bet my last defense bond that more mental notes were made on Mme. Espil's attire than on Senorita Regules' selections—although the latter, I was assured by one of Washington's outstanding musical authorities, also left nothing to be desired.

MME. ESPIL

Receiving informally at the top of the stairway, Mme. Espil wore a trim black frock, fashioned with a bodice of diagonal tucks, a V-neckline and a corsage of pink blossoms at the waistline. A string of pearls, with matching earbobs and long black suede gloves, pulled up past the elbow, further accented her attractive ensemble.

The Argentine Ambassador stood near his wife to greet the guests, and wives of members of the staff also helped to receive. Mme. Brunet, wife of the Argentine Naval and Air Attache, escorted friends to the drawing oom, where row on row of chairs had been arranged for the occasion. Mme. Parodi, Mme. Pardo and Mme. Scilingo also served as self-appointed ushers and helped to see that everybody found a seat.

At exactly a quarter past 5 o'clock, the Ambassador and Senorita Regules appeared at the piano. The former introduced the guest artist; the latter, looking exactly like a debutante in a bouffant frock of organza splashed with a floral pattern in beige, mauve and brown, announced her first number . . . and the musicale itself was soon under way.

Mrs. Robbins Brings News With Her

A classical program of five numbers made up the program, and a few minutes after it was finished the party turned into an informal cocktail fete in the dining room. White gladioli stemmed from large vases in the drawing room, and the white motif was carried out in the centerpiece for the tea table. Instead of the usual mass of flowers, there was a silver urn, flanked with small sprays of gardenias.

Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, who went into ecstasies over the program of the afternoon, admitted later that much as she adored Senorita Regules' playing, there were also "other reasons" she was thrilled. . . .

And then it developed she had just become a grandmother again, "for the fifth time," she added.

Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins

The child is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Robbins, who returned from South America not so long ago and now make their home at 4935 Hillbrook Lane. . . . The mother is the former Louise Auchincloss, and the baby was born at Harkness Memorial Hospital, New York, at noon yesterday . . . In a few days Mrs. Robbins hopes to get up to see the newest addition to her family, but she can't be sure just when that trip may be. "I'm too busy to do anything extra these days," she said—remembering, perhaps, that in addition to her regular office duties yesterday she also appeared on the radio.

To get back to the Argentine Embassy and the very pleasant party—among those present were some of Washington's dyed-in-the-wool music lovers, including Miss Mabel T. Boardman, Mrs. Edwin Watson, an accomplished pianist herself, who seemed to enjoy Senorita Regules' playing right down to the final note; Mrs. Truxtun Beale, sitting with Dr. Hans Kindler; Mrs. Nelson Rockefeller, Mrs. Arthur Woods, in an all-red ensemble that was most becoming; Mrs. Matthew J. Whittall, taking a chair near the front, and Mrs. Stanley Woodward, slipping into a rear-row chair just before the program began.

Several Men Among Those Present

Ordinarily, you don't see many men at an afternoon musicale in this Nation's Capital, but yesterday the female of the species was no more numerous than the male. Several members of the army and naval Argentine commission arrived early and stayed late. Charles Carroll Glover accompanied his wife. Charles Davila, former Rumanian Minister here, was a center of attention (and also, I might add, a subject of speculation by at least two guests). Clarence Hewes, who gave a dinner last evening, was among those present at the afternoon fete; also, Percy Blair, who will be a dinner host at Anderson House on Monday evening. Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, the Misses Patten, Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, Countess Van der Straten-Ponthoz and Mrs. Charles Henderson were others I saw there; also, Mrs. Richard McCreery, who was asking a few friends in for a buffet supper on Sunday evening; Countess Laszlo Szechenyi, Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt and Mrs. Frank Letts, mother of the hostess, who was very much in the best-dressed class herself.

When one's career clashes with one's social calendar, the second is apt to be shifted in favor of the other. It is, anyway, where Maria Martins is concerned. So, the dinner that Mr. and Mrs. John Wiley had planned for Saturday night has been moved up to Sunday because Mme. Martins couldn't be on hand for the earlier date. . . . She will be in New York on Friday to attend the Pan-American art exhibition in which some of her sculptures will appear, and she will stay over the following day for a visit to the Museum of Modern Art, where her magnificent statue of Christ, carved in jaracanda wood, is now on exhibition. . . . You know, of course, that the sculpture was recently presented to the museum by Nelson Rockefeller, former president of the museum.

MME. MARTINS

Every day sees a new name added to the list of candidates for the post as United States envoy to the Soviet Union . . . but the rumor now carrying most weight around Capitol Hill is the one swirling around Joseph E. Davies as the most plausible possibility. . . . Maybe it's just because a number of Senators and Representatives have just finished reading their free copies of Davies' book, "Mission to Moscow," but, anyway, to most members of Congress he seems the only person in the United States who could fill the bill.

JOSEPH E. DAVIES

Around Capital tea tables you hear, of course, that Marjorie Davies simply wouldn't hear of her husband taking the job; that she doesn't want to leave the United States now; that she's dead set on staying in Washington for the duration, and that all those things considered, Joe would turn down the job if it were offered. . . . Well, dismiss all that from your mind as so much bosh. . . . If the President offers Davies the job, you can be sure he'll take it. . . . And Mrs. Davies will be the first one to put her stamp of approval on the acceptance.

Wife of Former Swiss Minister Honored at Tea

At an informal 5 o'clock tea yesterday afternoon in her apartment at the Wardman Park, Mme. de Bianchi, wife of the Minister of Portugal, entertained in honor of Mme. Marc Peter, wife of the former Swiss Minister to the United States.

Guests who dropped in yesterday were mostly from the diplomatic set and long-time friends of the guest of honor. Among them were Mrs. Harlan F. Stone, wife of the Chief Justice, Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, Mme. Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador, Senora de Michels, wife of the Chilean Ambassador, Mme. Ciechanowska, wife of the Ambassador of Poland, Senora de Recinos, wife of the Minister of Gautemala, Mme. Bilmanis, wife of the Latvian Minister, Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Yugoslav Minister, Mrs. Ralph Close, wife of the South African Minister, Representative Katherine Byron, the Misses Pauletta and Ida Guffey, Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck and Miss Vera Bloom.

Masaryk Sees SlavonikaBallet

A double-barreled evening of art went on last night's calendar for Jan Masaryk, the visiting Foreign Minister of Czecho-Slovakia, who attended not just one performance but two, between 8 o'clock and midnight.

Accompanying the Minister of Czecho-Slovakia and Mme. Hurban, he first viewed the opening performance of the Ballet Theater, which presented "Slavonika," and later went on to the Almas Temple for the performance of the Chamber Music Guild.

Capital society turned out in full force for both programs and a number of dinners preceded the events. Mrs. Arthur Woods entertained a group of out-of-town friends in her Georgetown home for dinner before taking them to the ballet, and Mrs. Foster Adams had several guests for dinner and the Chamber Music concert.

Jessica Stevens Exchanges Vows With S. D. Loring

Pinehurst, N. C., Jan. 14.—Mrs. Jessica T. Stevens, of Westwood, Mass., and Knollwood, N. C., announces the marriage of her daughter, Miss Jessica Ann Stevens, to Stanton Dunster Loring 2d, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Cushing Loring, of Newton, Mass., at the Pinehurst Village Chapel, this afternoon, at 5 o'clock.

The Rev. T. A. Cheatham, D. D., pastor of Village Chapel, officiated. The service was attended only by intimate friends.

Clifton Delmar Stevens, of Baltimore, gave his sister in marriage, and William Cushing Loring, of Washington, was best man. The service followed a wedding supper held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Chatfield, in Knollwood.

The bride is the daughter of Charles Leigh Stevens, of Baltimore and Savannah. She attended Windsor School at Boston and Vassar College. Mr. Loring graduated with the 1941 class at Harvard.

The couple will make their home in Boston, where Mr. Loring has a Government position.

Dinner Honors Mrs. Fenton Turck

In a whirl of parties during her few days stay in the Capital, Mrs. Fenton B. Turck, of New York, was feted at a dinner last night by Mrs. John Allan Dougherty in her apartment on Columbia Road.

Mrs. Turck, who is the house-guest of Mrs. Dougherty, will be honored at a luncheon today to be given by Mrs. Mae Hamilton, and Sunday night, Mrs. Dougherty will again be hostess at a dinner in her honor.

At last night's party the ranking guests were the Turkish Ambassador and Mme. Ertegun.

New Service Arrival

Harris & Ewing

Mrs. Clark Henderson, who, with her husband, Ensign Henderson, is busy getting settled in her apartment on Conduit Road. Ensign Henderson, who is the son of Col. and Mrs. Paul Henderson, of this city, has come here recently from New York to take up his duties with the Bureau of Aeronautics in the Navy Department

Anne Parry Plights Troth

Of interest to a great many Washingtonians is the announcement in Philadelphia by Mr. and Mrs. John Carle Parry, jr., of "Playmore," Gwynedd Valley, Pa., of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Anne Comly Parry, to Walter Lloyd Tillman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd M. Tillman.

Miss Parry was graduated from Beaver College and Mr. Tillman was graduated from the Episcopal Academy and the University of Pennsylvania. He is a grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. Walter H. Klopfer of this city.

The bride-elect is a noted athlete, having played on the tennis and squash teams of the Germantown Cricket Club at Mahein in Philadelphia and is a member of the All-American hockey team, having played in nearby Washington on many occasions. Mr. Tillman is president of the Philadelphia Squash Racquets Association and is vice president of the Middle States Lawn Tennis Association and the Cynwyd County Club.

Mrs. Spear Off For Portsmouth To Christen Sub

Off for Portsmouth, N. H., where she will christen a new submarine, Mrs. Ray Spear, wife of Rear Admiral Spear, left last night for New England.

Following the launching of the submarine, the Herring, at which Miss Pauline Hayden will be maid of honor, Mrs. Spear will be the guest of honor at a reception. While in Portsmouth, she will be the guest of Capt. and Mrs. M. H. Philbrick.

Rear Admiral and Mrs Spear's daughter, Mrs. R. S. Rooney, is expected to arrive in the Capital soon with her small son. She is from Honolulu.

Batemans Are Guests Of Sir Ronald Campbell

The British Minister, Sir Ronald Cambell, has as his guests at his home on N Street the British Minister-designate to Mexico, Charles Bateman and Mrs. Bateman.

Mr. Bateman is the first minister to Mexico since that country and Great Britain served diplomatic relations in 1938. He was formerly Counselor of the British Embassy in Cairo. The Bateman's who are en route to Mexico City, will be here until tomorrow.

Party Will Fete Dr. Van Mook

The Minister of the Netherlands and Mme. Loudon will entertain on Saturday at a reception in honor of Dr. Hubertus Van Mook, who has recently been named Lieutenant Governor General of the Netherlands East Indies.

Dr. Van Mook, who arrived in Washington on Tuesday morning, has recently completed a tour of Australia. He expects to hold a reception for the press on Tuesday, but those plans, as well as others on his schedule, have not definitely been arranged.

Wife of Marine Officer Returns To Quantico

Mrs. Holland Smith spent last weekend at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., where she was the guest of her son and daughter-in-law, Lieut. and Mrs. Victor Smith, coming on to Washington the first of the week to be the house guest of Mrs. Vandegrift.

Fotitches Honor N. Y. Guests at 'New Year' Party

They were drinking champagne toasts to "Happy New Year" at the Yugoslav Legation Tuesday night when the Minister and Mme. Fotitch entertained in honor of M. and Mme. Jevtic, who were their house guests from New York.

The guests, who arrived at 9 o'clock, dropped around to ring in the Orthodox New Year with the aid of paper caps and all the trimmings. About 60 guests joined in the community singing, accompanied by the impromptu piano playing of Mrs. Thomas Burke.

Among those at the party were the Czecho-Slovakian Minister and Mme. Hurban, the Greek Minister and Mme. Diamantopoulous, the former Swiss Minister and Mme. Peter and a number of others from diplomatic, official and residential Washington.

Mrs. Worthington Honored at Gay Luncheon Party

Baroness von Below does not mix her flowers. She believes in one color and one kind at a time, so that one variety of lovely bloom need not vie with others.

So yellow roses, their golden petals and deep green leaves undistracted by rivalry, centered the table yesterday when she entertained at luncheon at her Sixteenth Street home in honor of Mrs. Ralph Worthington.

Her guest list, which with her honored guest and herself numbered ten, included Mrs. Kenneth Watson, Mrs. Walter Tuckerman, Mrs. McCeney Werlich, Mrs. George Barnett, Mrs. F. J. Morrow, Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. William Culbertson, and Mrs. Emerson Howe.

Costa Rican Minister Fetes Visiting Public Works Chief

By Carolyn Bell

"Yes, I like being in Washington, it's exciting—and we are Allies, you know"—said the dapper young man with a twinkle in his bright blue eyes. He is the Minister of Public Works for Costa Rica, Alfredo Volio, who was feted at a 5:30 to 7:30 o'clock party yesterday afternoon by the Minister of Costa Rica and Senora de Fernandez. Senor Volio, who has been up here discussing roads and seeing Government officials, expected to leave for his homeland today. But plane reservations—especially toward South America—are getting scarce these days, so he will remain until Sunday, when a reservation is available.

Yesterday's party was the first Latin-American gathering of its size since the holidays—and guests were greeting one another with various references to the holidays. The party was given at Hotel 2400. Receiving just inside the entrance were the honor guest and the Minister and Senora de Fernandez, the latter lovely in a floor-length frock of electric blue. Also taking her place in the receiving line for a while was Leda Fernandez, pretty daughter of the house who wore a bouffant white taffeta frock with a sweetheart neckline.

Mrs. Hull Among Guests

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, came to pay her respects to representatives of the plucky little country that declared war on Japan before any other country in the Western Hemisphere—with the exception of Canada. Mrs. Hull was trimly turned out in a brown wool ensemble and short fur jacket. Her matching hat fashioned beret-style was most becoming.

In an adjoining room—where the flag of Costa Rica was proudly flying—a bar had been set up. Here guests sampled the pink punch or if they wished something stronger, tried a scotch and soda. Canapes of all kinds were arranged on the table that was centered with a low bouquet of spring flowers.

"Yes, I knew I would return to Washington—but not so soon." The gentleman talking was Carlos Campbell, new Counselor of the Chilean Embassy. Although it only was eight months ago that the Campbells sailed for Chile—they are back again and all Washington is delighted. Yesterday they were being greeted on all sides by their old friends. "I have forgot most of m English," wailed Senora de Campbell. But she is as pretty as ever, and yesterday wore a ruffled red collar on her black dress and a silver fox jacket.

Wearing an intriguing black feather hat and cocoa-colored frock, Senora de Michels, wife of the Chilean Ambassador, was accompanied by her daughter, Senorita Cristina Michels, who wore a springlike white hat to set off her black ensemble. Cristina was in deep conversation with Luisa Teetz, her sister, Kiki Teetz, and several other young Latin ladies. Senora de Escalante, wife of the Venezuelan Ambassador, reported that her daughter, Terry, is suffering from laryngitis, but is expected to be up and about shortly. Senora de Escalante was sporting an extremely chic hat of black and white feathers.

Latins Plan New York Trip

Should they take black tie or white tie to New York was the discussion Senora de Baron, wife of the Minister-Counselor of the Cuban Embassy, was having with the Minister of Nicaragua, Leon DeBayle. It seems a group of Latin-Americans are going up to New York this weekend at the invitation of Macy's store to see a Pan-American exhibit—and take part in the attendant festivities, including a dinner party. Senora de DeBayle was living up to her title as one of the diplomatic corps best dressed women in a smart brown ensemble.

Senora de Castro, wife of the Minister of El Salvador, was discussing the Friday evening dancing class with a friend in rapid-fire Spanish. She wore a black frock with a yoke of blue lace. Not far away was young Elena Castro, chic in all black with a large hat swathed in veiling.

Destined to be a new glamour girl in the young Latin set is pretty Graciela Matheu, who is here from Guatemala as the guest of Senorita Beatriz Recinos, who has just returned from a trip to her homeland. They were accompanied by her father, the Minister of Guatemala, Adrian Recinos. Laura Recinos, another daughter, remained in Guatemala and doesn't plan to come to Washington until spring.

The Mexican Ambassador and Senora de Castillo Najera were among those attending the party as were Mme. Munilla, wife of the Military Attache of the Cuban Embassy, who has just returned from Havana; Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, the Minister of Haiti and Mrs. Dennis, Senora de Caceras, wife of the Minister of Honduras, and many others.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

The Vice President and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace will be honored at a dinner tonight to be given by the Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. Norman M. Littell.

Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy was ranking guest at a dinner given last evening by Clarence Hewes in his home on Massachusetts Avenue.

Because of illness Mrs. Ralph William Close, wife of the South African Minister, will not be at home tomorrow afternoon as she had planned.

Senator and Mrs. Charles O. Andrews have as their house guest in their home on Albemarle Street, Mrs. Gaston H. Edwards. Mrs. Edwards is staying in Washington for a few days en route from New England to her home in Orlando, Fla.

Senora de Munilla, wife of the Cuban Military Attache, has returned to Washington after spending the holidays in Cuba. She was accompanied by Miss Mirta Batista, daughter of the President of Cuba, and Miss Dulce Acevedo, who are on their way back to their studies at Eden Hall in Philadelphia. Maj. Felipe Munilla also spent the holidays in Cuba, making an earlier return to the Capital.

Miss Jean David, niece of Rear Admiral and Mrs. Ross McIntire, with whom she makes her home in Washington, will arrive in Miami this week to visit Miss Betty Harris at her home in Bayshore.

Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman was hostess yesterday at the first tea of the English Speaking Union to be given in their new headquarters at 1915 Sixteenth Street. Assisting Mrs. Tuckerman were the Countess de Castellane, Mrs. Sidney Cloman, Mrs. John M. Jenkins, Mrs. George Baddoch and Mrs. Ralph Brewster.

First Lady Tells Club Of National Defense

Little likelihood that air raid shelters or gas masks will be provided in this country was cited by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt in her talk on national defense yesterday to the Congressional Club.

"There is little belief that we will have sustained air raids. The chances are against a concentrated attack. So there seems to be little reason for providing shelters," she said in the address at the clubhouse, although she did not discount the possibility that air raids may be used to slow up production and affect civilian morale.

"Harry Hopkins, on his return from London, said the shelters were filled with people who were insecure. People whose housing needs are met rarely leave home in an air raid. It is people whose housing is bad or who feel insecure in themselves who want to herd together," Mrs. Roosevelt said.

Large production of gas masks "would take essential materials from other things," she pointed out. "I doubt if we will find it considered that gas masks are worth what it will cost to make them," she added.

Mrs. Roosevelt explained that there were homemade precautions that would give a measure of safety against gas, and that information along that line will be available.

In answer to a question on how well the United States coasts are protected against surprise attacks, Mrs. Roosevelt said, "as far as humanly possible, both coasts are covered with a 24-hour system, and methods of communication are all worked out. The most vulnerable points are very well covered."

Mrs. Roosevelt urged that members of the club, which is composed of wives of Senators and Representatives, prepare themselves to be discussion leaders and to supply information to groups "back home" on questions about the Government and national defense. "Because you are close to government, this is a great field of usefulness for you," she told the club.

Keep Physically Fit, First Lady Advises

Women should consider it an important duty to put and keep themselves "in the best possible physical condition," Mrs. Roosevelt said.

"It's not just a question of playing games. It means building up physical resistance to work long hours and stand strains if necessary. It means feeding yourself in the right way," she added.

Then a woman should take on "some work that requires self-discipline, which means doing a certain thing at a certain time, whether it bores her or not, or whether she has a headache or not," Mrs. Roosevelt said.

She stressed the fact that persons should do their present jobs better than ever, and after that take on the extra work if they can. But she said a housewife who has little children at home should feel that she is doing an important job if she takes a nutrition course out of a manual, and feeds her family better.

Everybody in a community should be made to feel that he or she is taking part in the defense effort, for only in that way can the community be strong, Mrs. Roosevelt said.

She was introduced as assistant director of the Office of Civilian Defense and as an honorary member of the club by Mrs. John Taber, club president, who presided.

Mrs. Clarence Cannon Elected Vice President

At the business meeting earlier in the day, Mrs. Clarence Cannon was elected vice president to succeed Mrs. Morris Sheppard.

Classes in Red Cross work, first aid and civilian protection received registrations yesterday, under the direction of Mrs. Homer D. Angell, Mrs. Edward R. Burke, Mrs. Charles F. McLaughlin, Mrs. George Paddock and Mrs. John Robsion.

Mrs. Grenfell Describes Y. W. Activity in Native England

Under the stress and complications of wartime in England, the Young Women's Christian Association is making it possible for "Christian caring to express itself in gracious living" among munition workers and women in uniform, Mrs. Arthur Grenfell, president of the Y. W. C. A. of Great Britain, said in an address here yesterday.

She spoke at a tea given in her honor by three board members of the Washington Y. W. C. A. The hostesses were Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, wife of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; Mrs. Wilbur J. Carr, wife of the former United States Minister to Czecho-Slovakia, and Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, at whose home the party was given.

Lady Halifax, wife of the British Ambassador; Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State; Mrs. Henry L. Stimson, wife of the Secretary of War, were in the group which heard Mrs. Grenfell describe how the Y. W. C. A., often in makeshift quarters, has provided recreation and cheer for women working under great strain in Britain's war effort.

She described the youth centers where boy and girl factory workers, 14 to 18 years of age, come after hours to have clubs for drama, music and dancing.

Large hostels which the Y. W. C. A. operates for munition workers, mobile canteens which visit lonely antiaircraft posts—were among the varieties of service which she described.

Mrs. Stanley F. Reed, wife of Justice Reed; Mrs. Robert P. Patterson, wife of the Assistant Secretary of War; Mrs. Lawrence Shepard, new general secretary of the Washington Y. W. C. A., were among the guests. Members of the executive committee of the World's Y. W. C. A., whose meeting brought Mrs. Grenfell to Washington, also attended.

New Officers Of Girl Scouts Assume Posts

To find and train "trainers" who in turn can prepare new leaders for defense work was set up as one of the objectives in the expanded Girl Scout program of the District yesterday, as new officers took over their duties.

Mrs. Edward W. Sturdevant, wife of Lieut. Col. Sturdevant, was installed this week as Girl Scout commissioner of the District.

Annual reports were made this week, and objectives set for 1942. The training committee reported 188 new leaders and volunteers trained in defense and group leadership courses in 1941. Some of these volunteers were trained for other organizations in the special defense courses given by Miss Eleanor Durrett, then local Girl Scout director, last summer.

The committee's records show over 700 registrations for specialized training courses given in 1941 to qualified leaders, committee members and council members.

The organization committee reported an increase of 12 troops (from 139 to 151) in 1941; an increase of 282 Girl Scouts registered, making a total of 2762. Its objective for 1942 is to secure sufficient volunteers to organize troops for the long waiting list of girls who want to be Scouts.

The program committee reported on the community work done by the Girl Scout Service bureau, organized a year ago as a contribution to defense. The report mentioned the work done recently by Troop 115 under leadership of Miss Frances Ready. This troop made arm bands for air raid wardens in the Northeast section of the city.

The objective for 1942 is identical with that of the program division of the national organization—to train senior Scouts for defense work in their S. S. S. programe, and to emphasize first said, cooking and knowledge of defense regulations.

Plans were announced for the annual Girl Scout luncheon at the Willard Hotel January 26, when Mrs. Margaret Culkin Banning, well known novelist and author of "Salud, a South American Journal," will speak. At the luncheon, which will be based on the theme, "Western Hemisphere Solidarity," Senorita Paolina Gomez Vega, vice chairman of the National Girl Scout Council of Colombia, will speak about the development of Girl Scouting in Latin America.

The new Scout Commissioner has been active in Girl Scouting since 1921. She first became a member of the D. C. Council in 1925; has been a member of the membership committee, assistant treasurer, and for the past two years chairman of the public relations committee.

She estaiblshed the first Girl Scout troop in Quantico when Col. Sturdevant was commandant of the Marine Barracks there. She has lived in the Philippine Islands, Panama, China, Virgin Ielands, Paris, and at numerous service posts throughout this country.

D.C. Pen Women Receive Banner

A United States flag was presented to the District branch, National League of American Pen Women, yesterday by Mrs. Paul Scharf, in connection with her address on "The Significance of the Flag."

Mrs. Scharf, who is secretary of the Daughters of the American Revolution's committee on national defense through patriotic education, spoke at the Pen Women's tea at its studio.

Mrs. Lillian Cleveland Mayer read a poem, "Our Flag," by the late Marian Longfellow, one of the founders of the League of Pen Women and mother of Mrs. Scharf.

The defense program at the tea was in charge of Mrs. Bertha Shanks Chaney, the branch's defense chairman.

Mrs. Lucia Ramsey Maxwell read her poem, "America Calling," written on the day that the United States declared war on Japan. She plans to have the verses set to martial music.

Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig sang "The Star-Spangled Banner," with piano accompaniment by Mrs. H. Lyle Campbell, president of the branch.

Mail Received by Churchill At White House Valued Highly

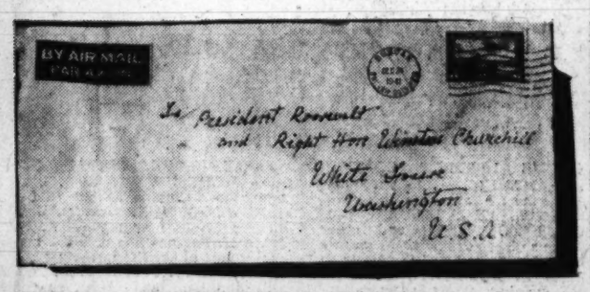
By William M Stuart
Post Stamp Editor

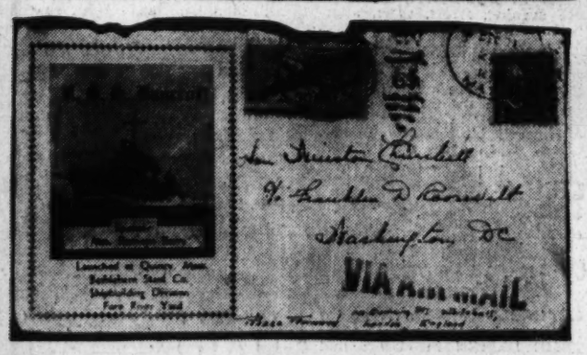
The Right Honorable Winston Churchill during his visit at the White House has received an enormous amount of mail. Letters have been received by regular mail, air mail and special delivery as well as by registered mail. No section of the country has been overlooked in postal circles, for the deliveries here have come from practically every State as well as from Canada and the British Dominions in this hemisphere.

The covers thus received comprise one of the most unique as well as the most valuable philatelic collections ever made. Scores of the covers bear all manner of cancelations and even the slogan and poster stamp has not been neglected. Some of the letter writers were very explicit in the instructions on the cover, intimating that it should be forwarded to Downing Street and if no bother just reurn the cover and also see that it bears light cancelations.

Much of the mail was simply addressed to Mr. Churchill at the White House. Then many letters read: "Care of Mr. Roosevelt" or just the White House. One letter referred to Washington as "B. C.". On another letter the address was: "Mr. Winston Churchill, Premier of England (not America), Washington, D. C., U. S. A." Others were addressed to "The Capitol" and then there were scores just reading "Mr. Winston Churchill, care White House, Washington, D. C. Private." Stamps of all denominations were used and air mails were very freely used. The writers of many letters believed that the Prime Minister would at least inspect the mail but the best that could be done was that the Embassy forces answered all letters. Eventually each letter will be replied to, as they are still being received at the White House.

The cover collector undoubtedly will be more than interested in the Churchill covers, for each one represents a philatelic item of some historical value as well.





He Wanted to Be a Professor

War Production Chief Is Soft-Spoken, Two-Fisted 200-Pounder

By Bill Brinkley
Post Staff Writer

Pipe-puffing, 6-foot Donald M. Nelson is a prime example of how Democracy's men-of-the-hour are oft fashioned by the quiet shifting of lives out of the stream of personal plan.

Away back in 1912, the 1942 war production chief had it all figured out how he was going to work for Sears-Roebuck only long enough to save money for a Ph.D. education at Princeton. He wanted to be a professor.

While the degree of doctor of philosophy from Princeton is never a thing to be snubbed, the Nation can be thankful today that the boy from Missouri didn't go after it; that he stayed in business instead and prepared himself for the husky job no one could have foreseen.

He climbed until he was general merchandise manager of the company by 1927 and its executive vice president by 1939. His experience in spending $4,500,000 a year for hairpins, tractors and 135,000 items in between gave him a business sense on which the whole country is about to harvest dividends.

Dividends, indeed, are already being paid. Nelson's acumen as coordinator of purchasing for the National Defense Commission and later as executive director of the Supply Priorities and Allocation Board has been credited with saving the Government large sums of money.

Nelson, 200 pounds of athletic build, is a believer in the soft voice. Mild-mannered, greying haired at 53, correctly but conservatively clothed, he has nothing of the noisy type. But behind that constantly surprised look is a stubborn fighter, thcrough, intense.

Once the Navy sent a rush "preference classification" order to a steel mill.

MRS. DONALD NELSON

"Sorry," the steel men said politely. "We're loaded with commercial orders."

Nelson took hold of the telephone and in even voice explained that the "sorry" stage in such situations had passed.

Half an hour later the steel mill president was on the telephone. "It's all a horrible mistake," he exclaimed.

The Mark Twain Hannibal, Missouri, country where Nelson was born, breeds the sort of quiet persistency-to-a-belief that is in Nelson's grain.

Son of a railway engineer, he led his class at Hannibal High School and thus won a scholarship to the University of Missouri.

His persistency is no new thing. At Missouri, he ate at a university dining club, the cheapest place on the campus. It was managed by a man named Sisson, who had bought a tremendous supply of canned rhubarb, which he served his patrons three times a day.

Nelson organized a group of disgusted customers who raided storage lockers and did away with the rhubarb. Then it developed that Sisson had ordered another large lot. Next day the diners raised a stir at lunch, pounding tables with knives and forks and yelling a jingle written by Nelson:

Rhubarb tender, rhubarb tough,
Good God, Sisson, we've had enough!

After working his way through school on a variety of jobs, including coaxing furnaces into action on cold mornings, Nelson got his chemical engineering degree in 1911.

Sears-Roebuck wanted a chemist to organize work in a new merchandising territory. It costs money for a Ph.D. education at Princeton, so Nelson took the job to save the necessary amount.

Education had lost a potential professor. But even the patriots of Princeton are probably not sorry today.

Committee Reports On $1-a-Year Men

Charges of nepotism, costly inefficiency and wanton extravagance in the purchase of equipment in connection with construction of a shell-loading plant at Minden, La., are being studied by the Senate Defense Investigating Committee which today will submit to the Senate a report demanding separation of dollar-a-year men from the arms program unless they sever private business ties.

In a preview of a 300-page "interim" report on recent investigations of operation of the war production program, the committee, headed by Senator Truman (Democrat), of Missouri, also disclosed that sharp criticism has been leveled at the Office of Production Management and the automobile industry.

OPM is assailed, the committee stated, "for its failure to expedite war production." Drastic revision of the agency's organization will be recommended by the committee.

The report severely criticizes the reluctance on the part of automobile manufacturers to convert their facilities to war production," the preview declared. "In this connection, the report emphasizes the fact that automobile production figures were higher in 1941 than in 1940, while at the same time automobile producers were delivering very small amounts of defense articles."

Practices permitted in construction of the shell-loading plant are likely to cost the Government three times the 13½ million dollars originally estimated for the project, according to Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana.

Instances of alleged nepotism have been called to his attention by persons living in the Minden area, including an engineer, Ellender stated. The charges have been turned over to the Truman Committee which, it was learned yesterday, has had an investigator assigned to the case for ten days.

The Senator declined to name persons allegedly involved, including the Army officer he said he was informed was sent from Washington to make an investigation and whose recommendations were set aside by a superior.

Ellender said the contractor for the undertaking is the Silas Mason Co., of New York. The War Department declined to give details of the contract, contending that the information was subject to wartime censorship.

According to the report made to him, Ellender said, every "department head" on the job has been imported from outside the State and has brought with him from "one to seven" relatives whom he has attached to the payroll and given preferred treatment.

Beneficiaries of the system of nepotism, Ellender stated, are reportedly allowed to earn wages when it rains and less favored workers are laid off. Earnings of executives' relatives, he said, run from $10 to $15 weekly above those of ordinary workmen.

Twice as many salaried foremen are on the project as the contract calls for and twice as many "hourly" foremen as needed, the report said, while calculating that the number of salaried foremen is sufficient to provide one for every 4½ persons employed by the hour.

So much equipment was brought onto the site, it was said, that only 40 per cent use has been made of it, despite the fact that rentals are paid whether the facilities are operating or idle.

Improperly constructed concrete forms caused leakage and "enormous loss" of concrete at $10 a yard, while a 3-inch mistake in the layout of a building was rectified by rebuilding the structure, Ellender reported.

Blueprints for some of the buildings called for fire-door openings, but these were sealed with concrete and later had to opened with chisels, according to information given the Senator.

As examples of extravagance in purchasing equipment, Ellender said he was advised that $21,000 each was paid for ventilators purchased in Pittsburgh, Pa., which could have been bought locally for $1800.

Fadeley Remains Unconscious At G. U. Hospital

The condition of Fenton M. Fadeley, jr., who was gravely injured Sunday when thrown by a colt, continued critical last night at Georgetown Hospital, where the well-known businessman and sportsman still had not regained consciousness.

The extent of his injuries has not been determined, although hospital attaches said he is believed to have been hurt internally. He has been unconscious since being admitted to the hospital shortly after the accident.

Fadeley, 44, head of Fadeley & Co. and the Colonial Fuel Oil Co., and a director in the Columbia National Bank, is one of the best-known riders in the Washington area. The accident in which he was injured occurred at the estate of Dr. F. Larmour Oyster, veterinarian, at 116 Inverness Drive, North Chevy Chase, Md.

Soldiers at Bolling Field Among First To Benefit From Victory Book Campaign

EX LIBRIS: "BOOKS FOR BUDDIES"—Soldiers from Bolling Field called at the Public Library, Seventh and K Streets Northwest, yesterday to collect the books gathered in the "Books for Buddies" drive. Members of the library staff helped the Buddies pack the volumes in baskets for delivery to the Army Air Field. Left to right—Francis Gehant, Frank A. Peters, Mary P. Scott and Henry H. Small. The soldiers are all of the 401st Signal Company, Aviation Soldiers at Bolling Field yesterday enjoyed early fruits of the "Books for Buddies" campaign.

Yesterday morning a soldier at the field telephoned Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, chairman of the District campaign to collect 100,000 books for service men. He asked if soldiers at the field could have some of the books given thus far in the drive.

After a few arrangements, soldiers from the field went to the Central Public Library and obtained 500 books.

Mrs. Smith also learned the soldiers would be mighty happy to get some sheet music for the piano someone gave for their recreation room.

Gifts of 697 books were contributed yesterday to run the grand total in the campaign to about 1700.

Persons giving books should take them to one of the public library branches or one of the District Grocery Stores, Inc., stores.

Talks regarding the "Books for Buddies" Victory campaign will be given at a meeting tonight of the District of Columbia Library Association at 8:15 in Scottish Rite Temple, 1733 Sixteenth Street Northwest.

Speakers will include Mrs. Smith and Miss Isabel DuBois, director of libraries, the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department; Capt. Ray L. Trautman, supervisor of libraries for the Army, and Mr. Ralph M. Dunbar, chief of the Library Service Division of the United States Office of Education.

Fight on Transfer Of Agencies Ends

Carran, "not by an executive order of the President, or it could have been produced, but by the order of the Budget Bureau, which today is setting itself up as a super-government."

He charged that in the case of the removal of the Patent Office to Richmond new headquarters will be set up in a warehouse there, and that 40 million dollars has been loaned by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the assets of a holding corporation of which the owners of the warehouse are a part.

Heads of offices ordered removed from Washington have estimated at District Committee hearings over the course of the past few weeks that only about 40 per cent of their employes are willing to move with their offices, he said.

"The setting up of five great regional governments is being considered," Senator McCarran continued. "There are those in this country who want to tear down the Government and create a great super-government and this decentralization move is one of the first steps."

Senator Tydings declared that Commissioner of Public Buildings William E. Reynolds has made a thorough study of the situation which reveals that there is sufficient space in the District area.

"The trouble is that there has been a sudden move ordered without an opportunity being given to hear the facts on the District side," he said. By construction of temporary buildings and housing developments in this area, he said that "millions of dollars can be saved, convenience served, and hundreds of employes in the District protected without loss to Fderal efficiency."

He recited the testimony heard by the District Committee in which numerous officials declared that the efficiency of their bureaus would be decreased and operating costs increased if they were forced to move from the Distrcit.

Downs' Suggestion

Majority Leader Barkley declared in upholding the Administration's action:

"It is extremely unfortunate that so soon after entering this war we are beginning to question the good faith of the President. This will cause inconveniences, but the war can not be won without causing inconveniences."

Miority Leader McNary stated he is not opposed to decentralization, declaring he believed that the war powers granted the President permit him to move agencies without the consent of Congress.

Earlier in the day, before the Senate's action, Chairman Downs (Democrat), of Connecticut, chairman of a House Public Buildings and Grounds Subcommittee, which has been conducting decentralization hearings for the past three months, suggested to the President a "crowding in" of more employes by doubling up in two or three shifts.

Downs forwarded with his letter to the President a message from Abner H. Ferguson, administrator of the Federal Housing Administration, in which Ferguson stated he is releasing to the Public Buildings Administration 30,300 square feet of office space for the use of other agencies.

Representative Downs suggested that if other agencies here made surveys similar to that conducted by the FHA, "hundreds of thousands of square feet of office space will be made available" and all agencies might be retained here.

Baltimore Papers' Striking Printers Return to Work

Baltimore, Jan. 14 (AP).—Members of the Baltimore Typographical Union faction who had remained away from work since Sunday returned to their posts today and publication of the city's three daily newspapers—the Sun, the Evening Sun and the News-Post—moved toward normalcy.

Newspaper officials said negotiations over wages and hours provisions in their contract would be resumed after a suitable interval.

Officials said the work stoppage was effected by a union faction which continued in a meeting requiring presence of a quorum for more than 60 hours.

The entire action followed a breakdown in negotiations over union demands made last October for a $10 weekly wage increase and reduction from 36 2-3 hours to 35 hours for a five-day work week.

President Renames Five RFC Directors

Five members of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were reappointed by President Roosevelt yesterday and their nomination sent to the Senate, for terms of two years starting January 22.

They are Charles B. Henderson, Sam Husbands, Howard J. Klossner, Henry A. Mulligan and Charles T. Fisher, jr.

George A. Cook was reappointed to membership on the National (Railway) Mediation Board for a term expiring February 1, 1945.

Dr. Marshall to Speak

The Rev. Dr. Peter Marshall, pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, will speak today at 8 p. m. at Western Presbyterian Church, 1906 H Street Northwest, in another service in connection with the celebration of the tenth anniversary of the dedication of the present edifice at 1906 H Street Northwest. The formal anniversary date was January 10.

Scrap Steel Rummage Urged To Avert Threatened Shortage

By Irving Perlmeter

Associated Press Staff Writer

A group of responsible Government officials today saw the Nation's huge war program threatened in 1942 by a possible shortage of from four to six million tons of scrap steel—the very metal which Japan bought up so avidly here in the prewar years.

Accordingly, they urged an immediate rummage of the Nation for all available scrap.

In a special memorandum for circulation among Administration leaders, these officials asserted that unless scrap collection were stimulated the 1942 production of steel—so urgently needed for munitions—would be smaller than 1941's.

The supply of scrap steel—an essential to the industry if last year's production is to be surpassed—was said to be so low that at New Year's only one month's supply was on hand.

Shipments of scrap iron and steel to Japan climbed to a peak of 2,035,000 tons in 1939, but in 1940 the United States required export licenses for the scrap and shipments dropped to 963,000 tons. No figures were available for 1941, due to wartime restrictions, but officials indicated shipments were below those of 1940.

Collections of scrap, both from industry and householders, was advocated on a scale so large as to build up stockpiles of scrap for use not only in 1942 but also next year. Other recommendations were for increases in pig iron-producing facilities, since pig iron is another major necessity in steel making, and also for increased capacity of the industry. Supplies of iron ore, however, were regarded as adequate.

"Any organizational changes that have to be made in order to do this job will be made. The present organization must and will evolve into the most effective possible instrument to do it.

"Everyone connected with production and procurement, in all agencies of the Government, must carry on with the utmost devotion and energy."

Observers pointed out that there was scarcely any point in reminding the three recipients of the sentiments expressed in the first and last paragraphs, and that the heart of the announcement was the second paragraph.

This was taken as a clear warning that the new production boss meant to carry out the reshuffling of OPM personnel which has been demanded, in increasing intensity, from Congressional, public and Administration sources.

Executive Order Drafted

The Executive order, designating the authority which the President outlined in his statement of Tuesday night, was drafted yesterday in Nelson's office and sent to the White House, it was learned.

It vests in Nelson complete and supreme powers over military procurement, a reliable source disclosed. He declared that as drafted, the order set no limitations on Nelson's "final" say, and that the only curtailment of Nelson's power would be that which he himself chose to impose.

Reaction to Nelson's appointment in Congress and in OPM was uniformly favorable. It was pointed out that Nelson has long insisted on the necessity of a central agency through which all contracts would funnel in order that they could be placed in industry in an orderly and most efficient fashion.

It was indicated, therefore, that Nelson's first and most important job would be to take the huge demands of the war program—185,000 planes, 120,000 tanks, 18 million tons of shipping—and break them down into the man-hours, the machine tools, the raw materials and the factory equipment necessary to produce them in the next 24 months, and to "match" them against available and procurable supply of these factors in America.

This coherent program has never been worked out in one agency; parts of the job have been done, but the "jigsaw puzzle" fragments are scattered in several agencies, it was explained.

Thus, OPM officials said, Nelson must assemble the total picture and lay down the pattern of the flow of contracts, coordinated so that individual procurement agencies—the Army, Navy, Treasury, Maritime Commission, etc.—are not flooding one factory with more than it can accomplish and neglecting the potential facilities of another plant.

Agreement on Auto Conversion

This process of marshaling data on industry's abilities and effecting the conversion of civilian production plants into segments of the war arsenal is expected to be accomplished partially through the OPM industry committees.

Along this line, encouraging reports were received from Detroit last night, where Chairman Cyrus Ching of the OPM management-labor subcommittee of the auto industry announced "unanimous agreement" on a nine-point discussion program for converting the huge industry to all-out production of nine billon dollars worth of munitions.

Ching said no conclusions had been reached on the proposals, but that the seven-man board would meet in Detroit early next week to seek agreement on procedures that would then be submitted to the OPM as a plan of utilizing the industry's labor, tools and machinery toward winning the war.

Jury Decides Hill's Fate Today

jurors in his charge this morning. Special Prosecutor William Power Maloney began outlining the Government evidence.

Hill was called before the grand jury when it was investigating George Sylvester Viereck and other German propagandists in the United States. Hill is accused of swearing falsely that he did not order eight mailbags, which were spirited out of a mailing base here, and stored in a room used by Fish. The second count of the indictment charged that Hill swore falsely that he did not know Viereck.

Called "Important Cog"

Maloney recalled that four House employes, one now a soldier, testified that Hill gave the mailbag orders. Three young women, once clerks for the late Senator Ernest Lundeen (Farmer Labor), of Minnesota, testified about telephone conversations between Hill and Viereck.

As Maloney spoke he stepped away from the jury box, raising his voice. Standing behind Hill's chair, the stocky prosecutor thundered:

"A man doesn't perjure himself without reason, unless he is a moron, and morons are not assistant secretaries of Congressmen.

"This Defendant Hill is an important cog in the most vicious propaganda machine, the most effective propaganda machine, the world has ever seen—a machine so diabolically clever that it was able to reach in and use the halls of our Congress to spread its lies and half truths, to divide and conquer us like France and Norway."

"They were clever, diabolically clever—operating in the halls of our own Congress."

Hill shuddered, grimaced and slid down in his chair.

"Long Arm of the Gestapo"

"When he went into that grand jury room," Maloney went on, "the long arm of the Gestapo followed him there and put those lies into his mouth to try and impede that investigation. Because the Gestapo knew that if Hill went there and told the truth, the American people would find out about the propaganda machinations of these false prophets of their false god in Berlin!

"We would find out how they spread the germs of hate from the very office of one of our legislators.

"Where did he get the money? How could he buy 625,000 reprints of that propaganda from the Congressional Record?"

Striding back to the table piled with Government exhibits, Maloney brandished the statements Viereck filed in the State Department.

"Here is Viereck's statement that he got $25,504 from his German bosses," said Maloney. "That is where the money came from."

O'Connor Asks for Mistrial

The day Hill was indicted, Attorney O'Connor said in court, "I am here to plead Congressman Fish 'not guilty.'" When he rose to speak for Hill yesterday, O'Connor blamed the prosecution on a desire to "get" Fish, to whom he referred as "a colonel in the last war."

Maloney protested that there was no evidence to this effect, that the defense had not called Fish as a witness. This provoked a heated dispute in which O'Connor asked for a mistrial—the third time he has done so since the case began. Justice Letts ended the squabble by saying either side could have called Fish.

O'Connor dwelt at length on the difference between interventionists and antiinterventionists, like Fish, before "Pearl Harbor." He asserted that in the 1940 Presidential campaign both candidates "pledged to fathers and mothers that their boys would not be sent to fight on foreign soil."

Viereck, said O'Connor, though an American citizen, favored "England" against Germany. (Apparently he intended to say the opposite). "But," he continued, "that doesn't say Viereck would not be just as loyal as anybody else" since war has been declared.

Feeling had been built up against the isolationists, said O'Connor, with patriotic ballyhoo. He declared, "'I love my country,' that's just a gratuitous bromide. Why should a man have to say that. It ought not to be necessary. It's like saying, 'I love my mother'."

All the isolationists, since Pearl Harbor, have pledged their support to the Government, said O'Connor.

Hill's lawyer had a good word, too, for the late Senator Lundeen. Lundeen's secretary testified that Viereck wrote two speeches her employer delivered in the Senate. "There is no suggestion," said O'Connor, that there was anything fundamentally wrong in the association of Viereck and Senator Lundeen." He said Mr. Lundeen was a fine, honorable man.

Recalls Campaign Attacks

Recalling President Roosevelt's campaign attacks on "Martin, Barton and Fish," O'Connor charged that the grand jurors "weren't after this little fellow. They were after Fish."

"Yet," said O'Connor, when the war came, 'Fish was the first man to take the House floor and offer his services in defense of his country."

"You have this unimportant little clerk before you," O'Connor concluded. "You can send him to jail, or you can send him home."

Maloney, closing the arguments, said O'Connor had not told the jurors "why Hill lied."

"Why did he lie," the prosecutor repeated, "Why did he lie."

Maloney said the jurors were investigating German agents and Hill was obliged to tell the truth, whether the inquiry was directed at Viereck or Fish or O'Connor himself.

O'Connor broke in to demand angrily that Maloney say whether there was such an investigation. Maloney said he did not mean that and O'Connor demanded a mistrial, his fourth such request. Justice Letts overruled him.

Justice Letts wil lbegin instructing the jurors about 10 o'clock this morning.

Should Hill be convicted he would face a jail term of two to ten years on each of the two counts of the indictment.

Directed Verdict Upholds Marshal In Damage Suit

United States Marshal John B. Colpoys was victor in a District Court action yesterday when a $10,000 damage suit brought against him by a local liquor merchant ended in a verdict in the marshal's favor.

The suit, outgrowth of a Municipal Court judgment, was brought by John H. Rowe, 3406½ Georgia Avenue Northwest, who claimed two deputy marshals entered his establishment in April, 1940, and removed his liquor license. Assistant United States Attorney John L. Laskey, representing Colpoys, said the license was taken in an attempt to enforce an attachment issued against Rowe for a jewelry concern, which had secured a $140 judgment against him in Municipal Court.

Justice Pine, in drecting the verdict, said the license should not have been taken, but that Rowe failed to show damages suffered as a result. Alcoholic Beverage Control Board officials testified Rowe held a beer and light wine license but had turned it in last January.

The jewelry concern, the Franc Jewelry Co., 627 Seventh Street Northwest, also was named as a defendant and was also victorious.

Estate Provides $600,000 for Heirs Of D. C. Socialite

An estate valued at more than $600,000 was left by Mrs. Katharine V. H. Wylie, Washington socialite who died on October 15, of last year, according to a petition for probate filed in District Court yesterday.

The will, dated June 19, 1926, sets up trust funds for the various members of her family. She left two sons and two daughters, all of whom share in the estate.

The bulk of the estate was in personal property, mostly stocks and bonds, according to the American Security & Trust Co., executor under her will. She also left a considerable amount of real estate in the District and nearby Maryland, in Kansas, and in the Province of Quebec. Debts of the estate are estimated at about $2000.

Biddle Claims Authority To Transfer Agencies

Attorney General Francis Biddle has informed the President that he has the authority to transfer agencies of the executive branch of the Government out of Washington. The opinion is reported to have been given the President before the Budget Bureau ordered 10,000 employes in a dozen agencies to move. Chairman McCarran of the Senate District Committee, who blames the transfer order on the Budget Bureau, believes the bureau acted without authority. It was reported yesterday on Capitol Hill that Budget Director Harold D. Smith will testify at a closed meeting today of the House and Senate District Committees on the decentralization order.

Dexter M. Keezer, president of Reed College of Portland, Oreg., and a former Washington newspaperman, is reported to have been offered appointment as chief of a new and enlarged consumer division in the Office of Production Management. He's the son-in-law of Lowell Mellett, one of the President's anonymous six. He would succeed Harriet Elliott, who recently resigned.

You can blame your decentralization troubles on the late SPAB, whose members insisted to the President that nonwar agencies be moved out to make room for the war agencies. Following the conference, the President ordered the Budget Bureau to bring him a list of the agencies that could be moved and the President made the dozen selections from a long list. He also designated the cities where the agencies would be transferred. Additional agencies will soon be ordered out but the Congressional opposition has delayed the orders.

'Solutions' Offered

An old-timer suggests decentralization would be prevented if: (1) District, Maryland and Virginia residents who already have homes here were given temporary Federal jobs instead of bringing people here from all over the country; (2) if Government employes should volunteer to rent rooms in their homes to new employes; (3) if the Government should requisition several large private buildings here; (4) if Government employes were made to paste stickers on their cars of the route taken to and from their offices and were made to pick up other employes taking the same route. All these things were done here during World War I when the population of Washington doubled. And decentralization wasn't resorted to.

Immigration and Naturalization Service will move to Philadelphia the last week in February. Not one of the 1600 employes will be compelled to make the move . . . GAO employes will discuss civil service in wartime today from 4:30 to 6 p. m. in the cafe of its First and M Streets Northeast building . . . Public Buildings Administration will move to Temporary Building T, now under construction at Fourteenth and Constitution Avenue Northwest

Conferees yesterday agreed to go along on the Senate version of the new defense housing bill which would permit USHA to build defense homes. The House ruled out USHA, but after the resignation of Nathan Straus, USHA administrator, the House conferees changed their minds. Deputy Administrator Leon Keyserling may be moved up as USHA boss . . . Milo Perkins has hired some 30 Agriculture officials to work under him at the Board of Economic Welfare. Jack Fischer, Farm Security information chief, and his assistant, Harland Cleveland, are among the latest to transfer.

Rumor has it that OPM Director General William Knudsen will resign, but the plan is to offer him a specialized production job and he'll probably accept it. Knudsen could be put in charge of the production of tanks or planes. He's being indicted for his alleged business-as-usual attitude, but the insiders will tell you that it was Knudsen who forced the present bomber program on the Government months ago at a time when even the Army was lukewarm toward it. But if Knudsen does resign, a number of other OPM bigwigs will go out with him.

Regardless, OPM is due for a terrific shake-up. The whole place will be reorganized, but it will be done slowly and only a few top heads will fall. The average employe hasn't a thing to fear. Donald Nelson probably will have two top assistants under him, one in charge of production and supply and the other in charge of rationing, allocation and production.

U. S. Mayors Again Elect LaGuardia

300 City Heads End Convention; Leon Henderson Wins Their Support

After authorizing New York Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia to convey to the Capitol its opposition to the Senate price-control bill, the United States Conference of Mayors yesterday ended a spirited three-day meeting.

The 300 city heads assembled at the Hotel Mayflower from Seattle to Savannah, left behind them a sheaf of resolutions, ranging from a plea for protection of small business to denunciation of Treasury efforts to tax State and municipal bond issues.

Designation of LaGuardia, whom they reelected as their president, to oppose the Senate's version of price control came after the mayors had heard Leon Henderson, OPA administrator, assail the measure.

Bill Called Suicide

"It's a case of national suicide if this thing comes," said Henderson, departing from his prepared text, in referring to the revised bill, adding that "as far as control of inflation is concerned we will be worse off under the bill as passed by the Senate than we are today."

Three basic problems must be faced, said Henderson.

"We must produce as never before, with an efficiency never before thought possible.

"We must keep prices within reason, so that the war effort may be accomplished on a basis fair to all participants and fair to the Government.

"We must avert an inflation of prices which, as experience has shown us, can lead only to a staggering aftermath of suffering after the band has stopped playing and we wake up with the dawn."

Plant Protection Asked

By adoption of resolutions, the conference:

Voted to ask the President, Congress, War Department and Office of Civilian Defense to organize military guard regiments for protection of "sensitive plants and areas."

Approved proposed legislation for a post-war public works program.

Urged continued appropriations to WPA, NYA, CCC and other Federal agencies which are in danger of cuts as a result of the war.

Recommended institution of a national drive against tuberculosis, comparable with the Federal crusade to combat syphilis.

Asked for local autonomy in Federal defense housing programs, also that projects conform to all local taxation and assessment laws.

Requested establishment of automatic priorities for essential needs of municipalities—sewerage material, fire trucks, etc.

Strenuously opposed "disturbing efforts to impose a Federal tax upon the income from State and municipal bond issues."

In still other resolutions, the Mayor's Conference praised the leadership of Mayor LaGuardia, and recommended promotion of closer relations between cities of the United States and those of Mexico and South and Central America.

Specifically, the conference advocated the celebration of Pan-American Day on April 14, urged cities to name streets and parks for Latin-America heroes and asked President Roosevelt to appoint a committee whose duty would be to solidify inter-American friendship.

Hillman Speaks

At the closing session, Sidney Hillman, associate director general of OPM, outlined accomplishments of the labor division and reminded his listeners that "it is your responsibility as municipal leaders to adapt the facilities and services of your cities and towns to the needs of war."

All officers were reelected, LaGuardia as president for the sixth term; Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago as vice president, Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore as treasurer, and the following trustees: Mayor Fletcher Brown, Los Angeles; Mayor Walter C. Chandler, Memphis; Mayor John B. Gage, Kansas City, Mo.; Mayor W. Cooper Green, Birmingham; Mayor Edward J. Jeffries, jr., Detroit; Mayor Angelo J. Rossi, San Francisco; Mayor Cornelius D. Scully, Pittsburgh, and Mayor Maurice J. Tobin, Boston.

Exciting Hour

Life Becomes Dizzy Whirl For Cabbie

MRS. ELMA PHELPS

Phillip Genthner, 40-year-old taxicab driver, figured in a marriage, a funeral and a three-story fall—all within an hour yesterday afternoon.

His cab was parked in front of 2335 Eighteenth Street Northwest when Genthner saw a woman run out of the building shouting "Help, Police!"

Rushing to the rear of the house, he discovered that Mrs. Elma Phelps, 23, had fallen from the roof porch outside her third-story room and—this probably saved her life—hit a projection on the second floor and rolled onto a brick sidewalk. She escaped serious injury, although one cut required five stitches at Emergency Hospital.

The woman sent off to the hospital, Genthner went to his cab. A young couple came out of the same building.

"Take us to the Rev. J——," they said. They were off to be married.

After delivering them to the pastor's, Genthner dropped by his stand at the Wardman Park Hotel.

He immediately picked up a fare. "Take me to 2335 Eighteenth Street Northwest," the passenger directed.

Genthner is a person not easily shaken, so he managed to hold on. At the same address, No. 2335, the fare told him to wait. The passenger went inside, returned with a man and woman. The three got into the cab.

"Take us to the . . . funeral home," the fare said.

All this happened between 2 and 3 p. m.

Genthner, who lives at 4806 Oliver Street, Riverdale, Md., has been a cabbie now for seven years, but yesterday's was his most amazing experience.

Unoccupied House Damaged by Fire

Fire of unknown origin early last night damaged the rear, second floor section of a vacant frame home at 812 Kennedy Street.

The residence, which was unfurnished, is owned by E. Vaughan Shockey, real estate man, of 3930 Argyle Terrace.

Eight pieces of fire-fighting apparatus responded to the two-alarm call.

Nearby Loan Firms Face Taxing Move

D. C. Will Attempt To Collect Levies From Concerns in Maryland, Virginia

By Howard F. Wentworth

Post Staff Writer

An attempt will be made by the Commissioners, it was revealed last night, to force small loan concerns in nearby Maryland and Virginia to pay taxes to the District on income derived from "local sources."

Openly disturbed over defeat in the House Monday of a municipal small loan bill providing 2 per cent monthly interest charges as against 3 or more per cent demanded in adjacent jurisdictions, Commissioner Guy Mason said the city would seek to collect "every cent to which it is entitled."

He estimated that Washington residents pay annually between $600,000 and one million dollars to loan companies in adjoining States.

Plans will be laid, said Mason, to require District taxpayers, in their income returns, to show to whom and where they paid interest on loans outside the city. So-called "foreign" loan outfits also will be asked to furnish records of "outside" revenue, Mason declared.

Cites Several Examples

"Then," he said, "from information received, we will be able to go after those fellows and force them to pay us taxes on income derived from sources within the District."

Mason explained that District tax laws now permit levies on firms in other sections of the country which receive income from local transactions. He cited, as an example, the Eastman Kodak Co., of Rochester, N. Y., and several brewing companies located outside the city.

He pointed out that the concerns in question do not necessarily have to have offices within the city limits, but that the "source" of their income could be based on soliciting through local advertising mediums.

"The loan sharks," said Mason, "have beaten our bill in the House—for the moment, at least. But they will not escape paying us taxes."

Work on ways and means of collecting "our just due" will begin immediately, Mason added.

At the same time last night, the Commissioners announced intentions of formulating a program to protect local consumer interests in the face of increased taxes and higher prices.

Plan Special Licenses

Commissioner John Russell Young said he had instructed George M. Roberts, superintendent of weights, measures and markets, to confer with Budget Officer Walter Fowler on proposed new policies.

Merchants who sponsor advertising which misrepresents or falsifies stand the chance of having their licenses revoked or suspended under plans being considered, Young reported.

To provide additional revenue the Commissioners also proposed special licenses for pin ball and vending machines and outside vendors who park on District streets to sell fruits and other products imported by trucks from the various States.

The Commissioners, in addition, said they were looking into the possibility of taxing banks and landlords who receive advance payments on interest or lodging fees.

Baltimore Church Calls Rev. Welles

The Rev. Edward Welles, rector of historic Christ Church, Alexandria, has been called by St. Paul's Church in Baltimore, one of the largest churches in the Episcopal Diocese of Maryland.

He has not, however, decided whether he will accept the call, but has told the congregation a decision may be expected in the near future.

Little Girl Dies of Gas In Arlington

Two-year-old Alice Virginia Bolling died of gas poisoning last night after her childish curiosity had prompted her to turn on an oven jet in the kitchen of her home, 5634 North Sixth Street, Arlington, Va., according to police.

The blonde, curly-haired child was pronounced dead at 8:55, a little more than two hours after she was found lying unconscious on the kitchen floor. Alfred C. Bolling, 26, her father, who is a mechanic, was asleep and partly overcome by the gas in an adjoining room.

Dr. William C. Barr pronounced the child dead after rescue squads from the Clarendon and Jefferson fire departments has worked over her with an inhalator for two hours. The father was rushed to Emergency Hospital, where he was said to be improving.

According to Arlington police, the tragedy occurred while the child's mother was away on a shopping trip. When her father lay down on a couch to take a nap, the little girl apparently toddled into the kitchen and began playing with the stove. The oven jet was turned wide open.

The odor of gas was detected, police said, by Patsy Keys, 4, whose family lives in another apartment in the house.

Zoo's Hippopotamus Bears 80-Lb. Babe—Both Doing Well

It's a boy or girl at the Hippo's.

No one at the zoo was sure which it was yesterday and no one cared.

The only thing they were concerned about, from Director William M. Mann and Head Keeper William H. Blackburne on down, was Pinkie's speedy recovery and the survival of her little Vic.

"Vic for Victory, that's the name," announced Dr. Mann, rather wan and weary after spending half the night sitting up with Pinkie, whose travail was rewarded at 6:10 a. m. yesterday when she became the mother of an 80-pound hippopotamus.

Pinkie, separated by half the length of the pachydern house from her mate Bongo for these last several weeks, came through the ordeal in good shape. Her baby is a strapping specimen, about the size of an English bulldog.

"Now if the old lady will just nurse the calf," mused Blackburne, munching a sandwich which an assistant had brought to him outside the confinement cage.

Frequently a beast, overwrought by the experience of motherhood, will refuse to feed its young and might even kill it. That's why the zoo keepers are still anxious about Pinkie.

Washington has not had a baby hippopotamus—not counting pygmy hippos—for more than 15 years. So Mann, Blackburne & Co. want especially that Vic shall survive.

When Pinkie began showing signs of the stork's approach Tuesday afternoon the pachyderm house was closed to the public. Keepers Ralph Norris and Malcolm Davis took their stations to stand by for the duration.

At intervals Dr. Mann and Blackburne would come in to see how things were going. The former's last visit came at 2 a. m. yesterday. A little more than four hours later Pinkie was nudging her son or daughter around in the tank.

"We were pretty excited," confessed Norris, stroking a two-day growth of beard, "but the old girl behaved just fine."

Pinkie, a former circus trouper who came to National Zoological Park in a swap nearly three years ago, bore a young one in 1939 but it died. She is 13 years old, weighs about 4500 pounds. Bongo, Vic's papa, weighed only 700 pounds when he came here in 1914 as a 1-year-old. He now scales around three tons.

"Y'know," said Norris, "I think Bongo knew when he became a father. What I mean is, he got sort of a signal, a half grunt and half roar, from Pinkie. He answered and she repeated the signal and they kept it up for quite a while. The giraffes and elephants and others in the house didn't seem to pay any attention."

The event broke perfectly, chronologically speaking, for Frank Lowe, assistant head keeper. By his prediction that the baby hippo would arrive on January 14 he won the "Pinkie pool," which gives him a free ticket to the Shrine circus which will be held here next month.

Man Held In Auto Death Of Lieutenant

Coroner's Jury Levies Charges Despite Defendant's Denial of Driving

Despite his avowal that he was not the operator of an automobile in which Lieut. Richard Welsh, 27, U. S. N., of Providence, R. I., met death last Monday night, Russell R. Randall, 30, of 3700 Massassachusetts Avenue Northwest, was held for manslaughter by a coroner's jury yesterday.

An engineer in the Quartermaster General's Office, Randall took the stand at the inquest and told the jury that Welsh, who was killed in a two-car collision in the 3400 block of Garfield Street Northwest, was driving the coupe.

His statement was contradicted to police testimony and photographs which indicated Welsh was a passenger in the car and that Randall was the operator.

Sergt. Roy Ostrum of the Accident Prevention Unit testified that Randall was intoxicated and that the force of the collision threw Lieut. Welsh from the high-powered coupe.

Pictures taken of the automobile showed that the door on the right-hand side of the machine was dented inside as if struck a hard blow, and the inside door handle was knocked off.

Sergt. Ostrum said in his opinion the door was damaged by Welsh's body crashing against it. The latter fell from the car to the street when the door came open, he said.

The automobile skidded on ice and crashed into one driven by Booker Polk, Negro, 29, of 1335 Wallach Place Northwest. Polk was absolved by the jury.

After a second inquest, the jury returned a manslaughter verdict against the unknown operator of a hit-run car which struck and killed Edward Crane, 7, of 5108 Eighth Street Northwest, December 30.

The boy was struck while riding a Christmas scooter in the 900 block of Hamilton Street Northwest. The motorist failed to stop and so far has not been apprehended.

Ballet Theater Lives Up to Advance Notices

C. C. Cappel Concert Bureau presents the Ballet Theater on Wednesday night in Constitution Hall. Program: Slavonika (music by Dvorak), Lilac Garden (music by Chausson) and Bluebeard (music by Offenbach). Conductor: Antal Dorati.

Visiting Washington on the start of a long tour, the reorganized Ballet Theater made its local debut last evening in Constitution Hall and fully justified the pleasant reports that had come from its New York season. The company brought along a repertoire unfamiliar here, including "Slavonika" and "Bluebeard," which had their American premieres last November, and "Lilac Garden," which was formerly called "Jardin aux Lilacs," in conformity with the Gallic plot and music. With all the disadvantages of a bare stage, the troupe proved itself versatile in styles and excellent in coordination, winning the immediate favor of an audience that should have been larger.

BROWN

"Slavonika" was devised by Vania Psota in commemoration of the centenary of Antonin Dvorak's birth, and several of the Slavonic dances of that composer are the basis for its spirited action and simple continuity. Modified Czech costumes in which red, blue and green were the predominant colors gave the ballet picturesqueness, and the Czech dances were also considerably changed in character. The result was neither true folk dancing nor ballet routine, but a little artificial in tone. Maria Karnilov took the dancing in folk style of Yura Lazovski, Jan Gibson and Nikolai Orlov as three peasant lads.

KAREN CONRAD

ties her ballet slippers preparatory to going on stage

Antony Tudor's "Lilac Garden" is a charmingly atmospheric period piece and a memorable choreographic poem. It took artistic imagination to visualize the dramatic possibilities of Chausson's "Poeme" for violin and orchestra, and to contrive a triangular plot that would not clash with the music. Mr. Tudor is to be congratulated on a small masterpiece of dancing in which the mood is all essential. Though some of the illusion was lost in the absence of the lilac bushes of Raymond Sover's original decor, the ballet has an inherent tensity that grips the spectator with its unspoken tragedy. The protagonists in the miniature drama were Alicia Markova, Karen Conrad and the choreographer himself.

One believes that Jacques Offenbach would have been delighted with the ballet version of his opera bouffe, "Bluebeard," which was the concluding and longest item on the program. Antal Dorati has done a neat and effective arrangement of the music, retaining every whit of its racy flavor, and Mikhail Fokin has extracted from the libretto of Meilhac and Halevy a large amount of pantomimic fun. Anton Dolin danced the title role with dashing impetuosity and had a wonderful time in extravagant emotionalism.

Irina Baronova was cast as Boulotte, the sixth wife of the much-married baron with cerulean whiskers; Alicia Markova as Floretta (otherwise Princess Hermilia), and Lucia Chase as Queen Clementine. Simon Semenov as the Alchemist Popolino had the most grotesque guise of wizardry ever seen on any stage, and went through his hocus-pocus of preparing magic draughts with an eerie humor.

Bette Gay Grows Big—She Eats From Bottle Now

Bette Gay Bonbrest passed another important milestone in her young life yesterday.

She said goodby to the mealtime eyedropper.

Figuratively, of course, because Bette Gay is only 10 weeks old and her weight is a mere 3 pounds 10½ ounces. Even so, that's more than twice her birth weight, which was 26½ ounces.

Yesterday the infant, still in an incubator at George Washington Hospital, began taking her milk from a bottle. Up to now she has been fed with a medicine dropper. In a few days she is scheduled to graduate to an every three-hour feeding schedule.

Bette Gay is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy D. Bonbrest, 1144 Branch Avenue Southeast.

Basketball has come a long way since that November afternoon in 1891 when Dr. James Naismith rigged up those peach baskets in a Springfield, Mass., gymnasium and toyed with the idea that he was inventing a new game. He was completely correct. This year basketball is celebrating its Golden Jubilee as the game that draws more spectators than any other American sport.

POVICH

Basketball is probably America's only game of strictly United States manufacture. Football was adapted from the English rugby, and baseball has some suspicious features of the cricket that was being played by the British years before. Horse racing, prize fighting, ice skating, tennis and golf are all imports from the old world. But basketball is the product of an American mind.

In its Golden Jubilee year, basketball is honoring the man who gave the game to the Nation and the Naismith Memorial committee now proudly announces that the Aztec High School, of Aztec, N. M., has joined the campaign. Aztec High School and its basketball team may not set the world on fire, but its enlightenment in the campaign is important to the committee which now can count all of the 48 States active in the drive for funds to build a Temple of Basketball in honor of Dr. Naismith. Like 100 other high schools, colleges, professional and amateur club teams, Aztec high will contribute the receipts of one of its games to the fund.

Naismith's Rules Endured

The basketball gym is the night club of thousands of the smaller communities when winter arrives and the people are driven indoors. That little hall in the church basement, or the high school assembly room, or the community house is easily converted and there, perhaps, you have the reason for the spread of the game. Born in Massachusetts, the game was bred in Indiana, given finesse in Kansas, streamlined in California, and now packs Madison Square Garden.

The good Dr. Naismith was a football playing student at Springfield Y. M. C. A. College under Alonzo Stagg when, at the end of the 1891 season, the school's physical education department was struck by the lack of recreational sports for the winter season. Students were asked to submit suggestions for new games, and young Naismith accepted the challenge. He drew up a set of rules for a game to be played with a round ball on the gymnasium floor and asked that it be given a trial.

It was a rough draft of the game we now know as basketball. The first ball used was a soccer ball, and nine players were allotted to each side. The idea was to toss the ball into the goals, thus the peach baskets. The tossing of the ball into the basket was to constitute a goal. Players could not run with the ball, and shouldering, holding, pushing or tripping was labeled a foul. Naismith was prescribing wisely. Most of his rules have endured.

The Y. M. C. A. birthplace of basketball, must be given credit for taking it around the world. In smaller towns, the Y. M. C. A. owned the only gymnasium, and in the game's formative years it had rough sailing even in the Y. M. C. A.'s where certain instructors frowned on "the value of a game that would allow only ten players on a gymnasium floor that could otherwise accomodate 50 or 60". One faction held out strongly for mass recreation instead of the more highly-competitive game of basketball, but the game's popularity with the players and spectators won out.

Celtics Labeled Greatest Team

Even Dr. Naismith and his enthusiastic followers of basketball could not keep pace, however, with the game's spread; at least in one phase. Not until 1905, 14 years after the birth of the game, did the bright minds of the Y. M. C. A. discover that it would be a simple matter to cut the bottom out of the netting of the baskets and allow the ball to return to the floor following a goal. Until that time, balls were released from the basket by the pulling of a cord that dangled from the goal, turning the netting inside out.

The game's official souvenir magazine of the Golden Jubilee Year permits Maurice Rosenwald to call the Original Celtics the greatest team that was ever on a floor. "The Celtics could spot any team in the country 10 points and beat them," writes Rosenwald. "They would play in Cleveland on a Friday night, in Brooklyn on a Saturday night, in Philadelphia on a Sunday afternoon and in Madison Square Garden on Sunday night, and they won 741 games, losing only 70 in the space of seven years. At one point they had a winning streak of 93 games."

That was the Celtic team which contained Johnny Beckman, Joe Lapchick, Dave Banks, Dutch Dehnert, Pete Barry, Joe Holman and Horse Haggerty. They played in dance halls, in renovated barns and in the finest auditoriums, and when their competition was not too good, they played with one hand strapped to their sides, beneath the belts of their trunks, and still won. They gave the pivot play to basketball, and probably had more to do with popularizing better basketball up and down and across the Nation than any team ever assembled.

SPORTIN' AROUND

New York, Jan. 14.—Gene Tunney can now stop worrying about modern day Marines being pampered and spoiled by hostesses. Bernie Bierman, Minnesota football coach, is back in the Montezuma A. C. If he's half as tough with his Leathernecks as he is with his Gophers—those Leathernecks are going to start a long winning streak, too. Bierman's teams are always in wonderful condition—and one big reason for this is that every time one of his players muffs an assignment in practice, the entire squad must run around the field at a brisk canter.

When the income tax people get through with her, Sonja Henie will have pulled a Joe Louis by giving up all of the money she has made on her current tour. Seems that the movies she'll make this year will combine with her tour income to catapult her in a tax bracket which will take about 75 per cent of her year's income—and force the sports world's highest paid figure—and what a figure!—to get along on a paltry couple hundred thousand.

If there hadn't been a medicine named Viosterole, there probably never would have been an Alsab. Viosterole, as many a moppet can attest, builds up the juvenile appetite and has put color back into the cheeks of countless kids. Anyway, some years ago Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane sent her trainer, Bob Smith, to Emergency Hospital in Washington to inquire, abashedly, if Viosterole would be all right to give to a sick colt.

The doctors didn't know what effect it might have on horseflesh, but agreed that it probably couldn't hurt the colt; Smith took a box of the capsules back to Upperville, Va., where the colt—by Neddie out of imported Brocatelle—was hopelessly ailing. The colt munched the capsules, rallied, and grew up to be Good Goods. Good Goods, in time, produced Alsab. (Applause.)

Guldahl Called Turn on Snead

Every time Sam Snead blows a lead and loses an important golf tournament, as he lost the $10,000 Los Angeles Open on the last hole, there is a dull clank in our memory department and we're off, quick as a shot, a'thinking back to an afternoon in June, 1939, at Philadelphia. Sam took his deathless eight on the final hole of the tournament that afternoon and walked off the green as alone as any man ever was alone in a mob of 10,000. His face was the color of ripe roquefort. He looked neither to the right nor to the left of him, and the crowd edged away from him silently. It was just so awful that one couldn't even say "Tough, Sam." There wasn't anything to say . . . but after he had passed on to the locker-room, to sit with his head in his hands for a long time, Ralph Guldahl said something we remember. He said, "That fellow never will win a big tournament, after what he just went through."

Ray (Sugar) Robinson, the hot-shot welterweight who fights Fritzie Zivic again in the Garden Friday night—for the right to meet Freddie Cochrane for the title—abhors the name "Sugar." Its derivation is that he was often hailed as "a sweet fighter" during his bootleg amateur days. "Sweet As Sugar," one of his handlers elaborated—and the name stuck. Anyway, this stringy fighting man thinks it's too sissified. The mob of Harlem youths which travels with him during the great man's bright-eyed explorations of boogie-woogie spots, wouldn't dare call him "Sugar" to his face—which happens to be much more mobile than Louis' kisser, and even more alarming when Robinson's hair stands up stiff and weird. Robinson told his mob a long ago to lay off the "Sugar." He told them he wanted some more he-mannish monicker. He told them to call him "Junior." Sa-wish!

Heavyweight Champ Becomes Private Joe Louis Barrow

Brown Bomber Begins 13-Week Basic Training Period at Camp Upton

By Bob Considine

New York, Jan. 14.—Private Joe Louis said goodby to Harlem tonight, after a return to town from Camp Upton for a radio broadcast. And then he sleepily shuffled off to his swank uptown hotel for a couple fo hours of "shut-eye" before starting back to camp.

The heavyweight champion of the world became Private Joe Louis Barrow this afternoon at wind-swept Upton, along with several hundred other draftees. Reporters and cameramen were not permitted to view the event. Maj. A. A. Putt, executive officer of the post, feared their presence would interfere with the orderly conduct of the routine. He will permit Louis to pose in Army uniform sometime tomorrow, but indicated that thereafter during the champion's 13-week training period, Louis would be treated as any other soldier is treated.

"We're fresh out of red carpet," one captain chuckled today, just before Louis drove up in a long limousine to join the other draftees who went through the mill with him. If Louis has been given a ticketed for a cushion-seated job in the morale division of the second corps area, officers at Upton professed to know nothing about it.

Joe grinned today as he marched off to lunch in civilian clothes with other men in Negro company L—for he had learned of a good omen. Pork chops, which run neck and neck with fried chicken as Louis' favorite food, were the piece de resistance at his first Army meal.

Is Center of Attention

Until he was given the pass which enabled him to motor 70 miles back to New York to headline a radio program, Louis was the center of attention at the camp. About 100 soldiers and noncoms gathered around the warehouse where Louis first went, and called out in friendly, bantering way when Joe, much taller than the others, and much better dressed, came out of the warehouse and took his place in line with about two dozen other colored men. A colored sergeant called "Forward . . . hutch," and Joe was off, out of step. Soldiers gathered in knots all along the way to the barracks which will be Louis' home for the immediate future. "Watch out for his hook," one gay private called to the man walking at Louis' left.

After chow Louis underwent the first of several intelligence tests,

St. Johns Five Beats Fordham In Overtime

By International News Service

New York, Jan. 14.—The St. John's University basketball quintet defeated Fordham University by a score of 55 to 44. in a thrilling feature event of a double-header at Madison Square Garden tonight before a crowd of 11,000 cheering fans.

After trailing at the half by a score of 22-12. St. John's staged a big rally to overcome the Rams in the second half. An overtime period had to be played when the Rams tied the score 40-all. In the last five minutes St. John's scored 14 points to win.

In the opening game, New York University defeated Colgate, 43 to 24.

The locals overcame an early Colgate lead in a rather ragged game and were never seriously threatened thereafter. They led at the half by a score of 23-16.

Weight Lifters Lift Weights Saturday At Dulin's Gym

A preliminary meet for the Washington Senior Weight lifting championships will be held Saturday night at Dulin's gym, 1206 Twenty-third Street Northwest, it was announced yesterday by John Dulin, Chairman of the weight lifting body. The time is 8 p. m.

The meet, sponsored by the A. A. U., will feature Middleweight Champion Bob Stange and Light-heavyweight Champion Keith Kallio.

Men and women are cordially invited to witness the event.

Columbus Five Wins in Final Few Seconds

Acky Viana calmly stepped to the foul line with 25 seconds to play and dropped in a winning one-pointer for Columbus University last night as the Explorers defeated St. Francis College of Loretto, Pa., 44-43, in Tech gym.

Lenny Stanton had tied the ball game at 43-all with a foul shot conversion with 2 minutes and 6 seconds to play and both teams missed hurried field goal attempts in the final 2 minutes of action.

The visitors accepted their fifth defeat of the season against a single victory over Westinghouse Tech of Pittsburgh. They had been beaten by more convincing margins by Villanova, Seton Hall, Glenville Teachers and Indiana (Pa.) Teachers.

St. Francis looked as though it would come up with a second victory midway in the last half, however, as they boosted a 22-18 half-time margin to 32-24 at one time. George West snapped the Explorers out of a temporary slump with three field goals, two of the sleeper variety and Viana arched a pot-shot field goal to tie it at 33-all a few minutes later. It was basket-for-basket from there to the finish.

Darby Stands Out

The visiting Red Flashes produced the outstanding ballplayer on the floor in Jim Darby, whose 14 points were probably his last as he is slated to join the Air Corps soon after returning to school. He batted in seven field goals on close-up shots and had a hand in most every play.

St. Francis can thank Bob Berry, Columbus forward for two of its baskets and Viana's winning foul shot saved his teammate from being a goat in defeat. In the first half after St. Francis scored a field goal Berry took the ball under the basket and in a moment of absent-mindness handed it to Ed Kitike, of the

Mount Rainier Jayvees Beat Bladensburgers

With Carl Thomas hitting the basket for ten points, the Mount Rainier High School Jaywees defeated the Bladensburg Junior Varsity, 20 to 18, yesterday on the Mounts' court.

James Lloyd was high for the losers with 13 points.

Record Crowd Sees De Kalb Win Feature

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 14.—Before a record opening-day crowd of 16,533 fans, William Hirschensohn's De Kalb, claimed two races back for $4500 at Tropical Park, outran 14 rival sprinters for the entire 6 furlongs of the Hialeah Inaugural Handicap here today. The $13.30-for-two shot, accounting for his third straight victory, lasted in a furious drive to beat Maxwell Howard's The Chief, by a length, earning purse money of $5130.

The 4-year-old black gelding was timed in 1:11 4-5 and was piloted by Basil James, one of several riding refugees just arrived from the West Coast.

H. L. Myer's Sheriff Culkin was third, a half length farther back. Sweet Willow, installed favorite, tired chasing the winner and finished fourth.

Officials Elated

The biggest previous opening-day crowd recorded was the 16,294 of 1940. Last year's attendance was 15,093. Officials of the Miami Jockey Club naturally were elated over such response to the sport in the face of current unsettled conditions.

The gay throng was startled by the defeat of Louis Tufano's brilliant stake performer, Market Wise, in the secondary feature—a $1500 seven-furlong event for older horses. The conqueror of Whirlaway finished a fast closing fourth in a field of nine.

Judge Disallows Attempt to Stop Robinson Bout

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 14.—Supreme Court Justice Louis A. Valentine today denied a motion for a temporary injunction to restrain Promoter Mike Jacobs from holding the welterweight fight Friday between Ray Robinson and Fritzie Zivic, at Madison Square Garden.

The injunction was sought by Herman Taylor, Philadelphia promoter, who contended that Robinson agreed to fight Marty Servo for him before appearing in New York.

Georgetown, Colonials Meet Tonight at Riverside Stadium

G. U. Favored With Better Record; 4000 May See Rivals Renew Outstanding City Series

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Georgetown and George Washington, who packed Riverside Stadium last March to the point where the fire marshal was forced to close the doors to late comers, will meet in the first of the annual two-game series tonight at Riverside Stadium at 8:45 p. m.

Due to spotty records to date which finds the Colonials with five defeats in seven starts and Georgetown with an even break in six games, the crowd will hardly top the 4000 mark, or about three-fourths of the Riverside capacity. Tonight's game is the home attraction for the George Washington students, while G. U. students will use their home books in the second game, March 2.

Coach Elmer Ripley took his Hoyas to Turner's Arena yesterday to practice in order to further acquaint his charges with glass backboards, while G. W. Mentor Bill Reinhart held the usual practice in the G. W. gym.

Victor over Temple, one of the outstanding teams in the country on Monday night, Georgetown was able to pull up to the .500 mark for the season with additional victories over American U. and Western Maryland, by lop-sided margins, against defeats by Temple, Long Island and Fordham.

Hoyas Favorites

The Hoyas are slight choices with this record as G. W. has won over only Wake Forest and Clemson while taking defeats from Duke and Wake Forest among their Southern Conference foes and the three visiting Midwestern aggregations, Indiana, Oklahoma U. and the Oklahoma Aggies.

Both records are disappointing in view of the preseason build-up, but the feeling remains at both schools that the teams are better than the won-and-lost statistics to date. G. U. has a good first club but little reserve strength, while G. W. has several players of about equal ability after the starting five. Georgetown has a slight edge in height, while experience is about even up.

The respective coaches have been harping on too many missed short shots and foul shots as the cause of the defeats to date, and if both clubs should start clicking on the lay-up and push-in shots tonight, as they are about due, it's liable to be a 65-60 ball game.

Not the varsity quintets but the freshmen will carry the best records into tonight's triple-header program. Both are unbeaten and

Joe Chamaco Takes Lead In Billiards

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 14.—Joe Chamaco, colorful Mexican star, continued his brilliant play in the world three-cushion billiards tournament today, winning his third straight start with a 50 to 30 victory over Otto Reiselt, Philadelphia veteran.

The win enabled Chamaco to take over the undisputed leadership when Ralph Greenleaf, previously undefeated in two starts, failed in his effort to make it three in a row at the expense of Chicago's Earl Lookabaugh. Lookabaugh put on a fast finish, getting 20 points in 10 games, to defeat the pocket billiards king, 50 to 38. The match went 46 innings and was the first triumph in four starts for Lookabaugh.

Still undefeated with Chamaco were Champion Willie Hoppe and Welker Cochran, but they had played only two games.

Navy Courtmen Coast to Easy Victory Over Delaware, 51-20

Middies Hold 35-7 Margin At Halftime

Winners Use 13 Players; Bob Zoeller Leads Tar Scoring With 9 Markers

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 14.—Using 13 players, Navy's basketball outfit coasted to a 51-to-20 triumph today over the University of Delaware courtmen.

The Middies bombarded the basket for a 35-to-7 halftime lead and outscored the Delaware lads in the final half for their second straight basketball victory.

Every Navy player except two subs, Wally Honour and R. E. Spreen, tallied, with Bob Zoeller, forward, leading the pack with 9 points. Buck Thompson, visiting center, was high scorer with 10 markers.

Delaware was held at bay in the first half by the Tars' man-to-man defense and could only register two field goals by Thompson and three charity throws by Fred Mitchell and George Barlow.

Meanwhile, Zoeller and his co-captain, Bill Busik, and George Stivers led Navy's first half offensive, with substitutes taking over five minutes before the intermission.

Gene Huntemer, guard, set the scoring pace for the Middies in the final period. Navy grabbed most of the rebounds and caught the visitors napping several times on fast breaks.

Olympics Get Ice Trophy; Tie Rovers, 1-1

By the Associated Press

Boston, Jan. 14.—After receiving the Walker Trophy for winning the first half of the Eastern Amateur Hockey League championship race, the Boston Olympics opened the second half of the season by playing a 1-1 overtime tie tonight with the New York Rovers at the Boston Garden.

Goalie Vic Polich and Defenseman Al Yourkewicz, who expect to be inducted into the Army shortly, accepted the trophy from Thomas Lockhart, the league president.

The Rovers opened the scoring early in the third period when Hub Macey polished off a three-man rush by slapping in the puck from the edge of the Boston crease. About two minutes later, Ed Barry forced another deadlock by beating Goalie McGill with a closeup shot after Danny Sullivan picked up Ty Anderson's rebound near the sideboards.

Orioles Score Over Johnstown, 4 to 3

Baltimore, Jan. 14 (AP).—The Baltimore Orioles needed an extra period to eke out a 4-to-3 Eastern Amateur Hockey League victory over the Johnstown Bluebirds tonight.

The contest started slowly, with Johnstown holding the edge, but the Orioles made a strong finish, scoring twice in the third period to tie the score and breaking the deadlock midway in the extra round.

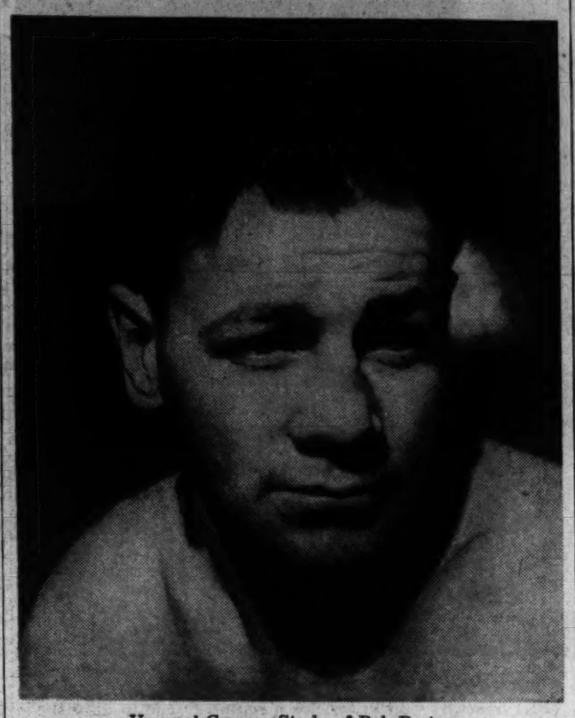
Skeeters Are Victors

River Vale, N. J., Jan. 14 (AP).—The Jersey Skeeters, who have snapped out of their early season doldrums, scored four times in the last eight minutes of play tonight to defeat the Atlantic City Sea Gulls, 8 to 6, in an Eastern Amateur Hockey League game.

The Skeeters have lost only one of their last seven matches, but prior to that had losing streaks of seven and eight games.

The home team took a 3-2 lead in the first period, but were blanked in the second period as the Gulls tallied three times for a 5-3 advantage going into the last period.

Lee Savold Signs to Fight Winner of Pastor-Villar Bout



Unusual Camera Study of Bob Pastor

Des Moines Heavyweight Holds Victory Over Spaniard; Turner's Scene of Fight

The signed contract of Lee Savold was received yesterday by Promoter Joe Turner and the impressario of the W Street arena announced that Savold will meet the winner of Monday night's heavyweight clash between Claudio Villar, 200-pound Spanish fighter, and Bob Pastor, ranked No. 2 in the Nation by Ring magazine.

The date set for the second heavyweight clash of the winter season is January 26 and it will mark Savold's second appearance in a Washington ring. Savold, who hails from Des Moines, Iowa, scored a knockout over Villar last August at Griffith Stadium. Savold recently won Frank Barbaro's "white hope" tournament in Detroit by gaining a decision over Jack Marshall in the finals.

Bill Daley, manager of Savold, is anxious to have his fighter meet Pastor, realizing that a victory over the former New York University football star would lead to a shot at heavyweight Champion Joe Louis. Savold has never met Louis.

In that August fight between Villar and Savold—which ended in the fourth round—the fans were treated to an old-fashioned slugfest. Villar has been clamoring for a return fight, claiming he wasn't in the best of shape for the first meeting.

Promoter Turner and Matchmaker Gabe Menedez are awaiting the arrival of Villar from Cuba, where he has been campaigning under the guidance of Harry Raskin. Villar cabled yesterday that he would plane in sometime today. From New York Jimmy Johnston, Pastor's manager, said his fighter would report here Friday or Saturday for public workouts.

Eagles Regain Stars, Engage Rover Sextet

The Washington Eagles will regain a real one-two punch at Riverside Stadium tomorrow night when they entertain the fast skating New York Rovers in an Eastern Hockey League game that is to donate 10 per cent of its gross receipts to the Blood Bank Fund sponsored by the Washigton Post in the intreest of Children's Hospital at 8:30 o'clock.

Tommy McCormack, veteran center and winger, an opportune scorer and excellent playmaker, returned to the line-up unexpectedly last Tuesday night to contribute two goals to the Eagles 6-5 triumph over Atlantic City. Paul Courteau, flying center and his team's leading individual scorer, also will be back on the firing line tomorrow night.

McCormack tomorrow night will swing back into action against the team against which he was pitted when he barely escaped serious injury recently. Just two weeks prior to tomorrow night McCormack was the victim of a headlong fall on the ice at Riverside after a flying collision with the Rovers' Alex Sandalack. He suffered twisted ligaments in his left leg and bumps and bruises on his head that kept him inactive until last Tuesday night.

One of the largest crowds of the past two seasons is anticipated for tomorrow night as one of the Eastern League's finest rivalries within the past several years is continued. In games to date the Rovers have won four of six starts and have beaten the Eagles in both of their appearances here.

Some idea of the closeness of games involving these teams is provided when it is noted that five of their six games have been decided by a one-goal margin, New York taking three of these and Washington two. The Rovers won the other contest by a 5-2 score.

Blow Us Down! Babe Phelps Signs Contract

Pittsburgh, Jan. 14 (AP).—The Pittsburgh Pirates announced today Ernest Gordon (Babe) Phelps, catcher obtained in a deal that sent Arky Vaughn to the Brooklyn Dodgers, had sent in his contract for the 1942 season.

The club said he accepted the first salary offer and expressed delight upon becoming a member of the Pirates. Last year Phelps played in only 16 games, refusing to rejoin the Dodgers after a dispute with the management. He lives in Odenton, Md.

Barons Score 21st Triumph, 2-1

Pittsburgh, Jan. 14 (AP).—The Cleveland Barons won their twenty-first triumph in the American Hockey League tonight by inflicting upon the Pittsburgh Hornets their twenty-first defeat. The score was 2 to 1.

Replates Win Over Proof Bowling Team

The Replates won two games from Proof yesterday in The Washington Post Afternoon Bowling League at Lucky Strike despite Anthony (Superman) Suess' set of 384, which is the highest rolled in the league this year.

The Engravers won the odd game from Lino although being outscored for the total of three games, 1497 to 1446.

By virtue of a forfeit over Street Sales the Mailers increased their league lead to five games.

Gehringer Not on Tigers' Team Roster

CHARLEY GEHRINGER

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Jan. 14.—For the first time in 19 years, the name of Charles Leonard Gehringer is missing from the Detroit Tigers' team roster.

Gehringer, 38-year-old mechanical second baseman, was not among 34 players ordered by the management today to report for spring training next month at Lakeland, Fla.

While admitting that Gehringer appeared to be at the end of his brilliant playing career, Tiger officials said they hoped he would remain in baseball as an aide to Manager Del Baker, presumably to be ready to give assistance at second base if needed. He would fill a coaching job vacated by Bing Miller, former Philadelphia Athletics outfielder, who was not rehired.

To fill Gehringer's post, the Tigers nominated Jimmy Bloodworth, acquired in a winter trade with Washington, and Lambert (Dutch) Meyer, one-time Texas Christian University footballer who was purchased from Knoxville of the Southern Association two years ago.

3 To Battle for Job

The Tigers assigned three of the seven available infielders to the shortstop job filled mainly last year by Frankie Croucher, who went to Washington last year in the Bloodworth deal. Murray Franklin and Eric McNair, recalled from Detroit's farm system, are slated to battle it out for the job with Bill Hitchcock, purchased from the New York Yankee chain at Kansas City.

First Baseman Rudy York and Third Baseman Pinky Higgins are unopposed for their jobs.

The Tigers have called 9 outfielders, 3 catchers and 15 pitchers, 5 under the 1941 list of hurlers. Notable absentees are Freddy Hutchinson and Bob Uhle, who are in the Nation's armed forces. Sergt. Hank Greenberg, former outfielder, also is missing from the list.

General Manager Jack Zeller pointed out that only three others—Catcher Birdie Tebbetts and Outfielders Barney McCosky and Dick Wakefield—are unmarried and that most of the players have two or three dependents.

Hogan Heavy Choice to Win Oakland Open

By the Associated Press

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 14.—Firing in the $5000 Oakland 72-Hole Open Golf Tournament gets under way tomorrow with Texas-born Ben Hogan as the prime favorite and two notables listed as last-minute withdrawals, evidently Army bound.

The prominent absentees are Vic Ghezzi, Deal, N. J., National P. G. A. champion, and Jim Turnesa of the big New York golfing family. They're en route home to report to local draft boards for physical examinations, after competing in the Los Angeles Open.

Hogan, best golfer in the country last year both from a money-winning and low-scoring standpoint, pocketed first prize in the Los Angeles event yesterday in a play-off with Jimmy Thomson.

The wiry, little former Texas caddy, now operating out of Hershey Pa., undoubtedly is the man to beat for top money in every tournament over the winter circuit. A year ago he tied for first place in the Oakland event with E. J. (Dutch) Harrison, of Little Rock, and Leonard Dodson, Kansas City, Dodson winning in a rain-doused play-off.

Harrison and Sam Snead, Hot Springs, Va., are solid choices to press Hogan for the $1000 first money here. Harrison lost in play-offs both last year and in 1939. Snead blew his chances for a win in the Los Angeles event with an eight on the final hole.

More than 160 pros and amateurs will tee off tomorrow on the par 70 Sequoyah course. The field will be reduced to approximately 75 after 36 holes. The two final rounds will be played Sunday.

Besides the "big three," Hogan, Harrison and Snead, sharp contenders include Harry Cooper, Jimmy Thomson, Horton Smith, Byron Nelson, former P. G. A. champion; Dick Metz, Lawson Little, Jimmy Demaret, Willie Goggin, Mark Fry and many other stars.

Catholic Five Tangles With Johns Hopkins

Catholic University will run up against one of its strongest Mason-Dixon Conference foes tonight when Johns Hopkins, of Baltimore, invades the C. U. gymnasium with the third place team in the Tri-State League.

The Johnnies beat Washington College, 45 to 41, Tuesday night for their fourth league triumph against a lone defeat at the hands of the Western Maryland defending champions. Bill Robinson, Bill Van Horn and Bud Tannenbaum are among the outstanding Hopkins starters.

Catholic U. has won four of six league games and will be at least an even choice on its big home court. Game time is 8:30 p. m.

Carmen Pirro's Cardinals will be at home again tomorrow night again tomorrow night against the Mason-Dixon unbeaten leaders and favorites, Loyola, of Baltimore.

Maryland will play its first game in nine at home tomorrow night against Washington College. Ernie Travis, the high point man in the Terps' long passing and quick shooting attack, will thus make his home debut.

The Shoremen were Maryland's only victims last year.

St. Albans Wins Conference Opener, 15-13

The St. Albans' courtmen opened play in the Interscholastic Academic Conference yesterday with a 15 to 13 victory over Baltimore Friends on the local floor.

The winners outscored the visitors from the floor, 7 to 5.

Durocher Expects Cincinnati To Give Dodgers Most Trouble

By the United Press

New York, Jan. 14.—The Cincinnati Reds, not the St. Louis Cardinals, will be the champion Brooklyn Dodgers' toughest opponent next season, Manager Leo Durocher said today on a surprise visit to Manhattan.

"I think the team we'll have to beat is the Reds," Durocher said. "The Cardinals have one of the greatest pitchers in baseball in Mort Cooper but their young rookies, Ernie White and Howard Pollet, may not do as well as expected. I also think the Cards will feel the loss of Johnny Mize, sold to the Giants."

Durocher, who flew here from Sarasota, Fla., to see his wife, Grace, received a prize for dress design at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel tonight, said he hadn't signed his contract for next season and didn't expect to until after February 1.

"I imagine I'll get my contract with the rest of the players around February 1," said Durocher. "I don't anticipate any trouble."

Hershey Sextet Beats Philly, 6-3

Hershey, Pa., Jan. 14 (AP).—The Hershey Bears defeated Philadelphia, 6 to 3, on home ice tonight to tighten their hold on first-place honors in the American Hockey League.

Undefeated on their own rink in the last dozen games, Hershey turned in five goals in the opening period while holding the Rockets scoreless.

Moe Berg Quits Bosox for Tour

Coach to Travel In South America As Good-Will Agent

By the Associated Press

Boston, Jan. 14.—Major league baseball lost its most famous student, linguist and world traveler to the United States Government today when Morris (Moe) Berg received his unconditional release from the Boston Red Sox to join the staff of Nelson A. Rockefeller, coordinator of inter-American affairs.

Master of nine foreign languages, Berg will assume the role of a "good-will ambassador" to Central and South America, where his fluencies in Spanish and Portuguese and his keen grasp of Pan-American problems will be utilized best.

Berg, who has been hailed as "Professor" by his diamond colleagues for years, never has ceased being an enigma to most of them, for most of his nonworking habits were in direct contrast to theirs.

When he was not attending to his New York law practice during the off-season, he was studying some intricate international problem in some far part of the world.

Chose Baseball Career

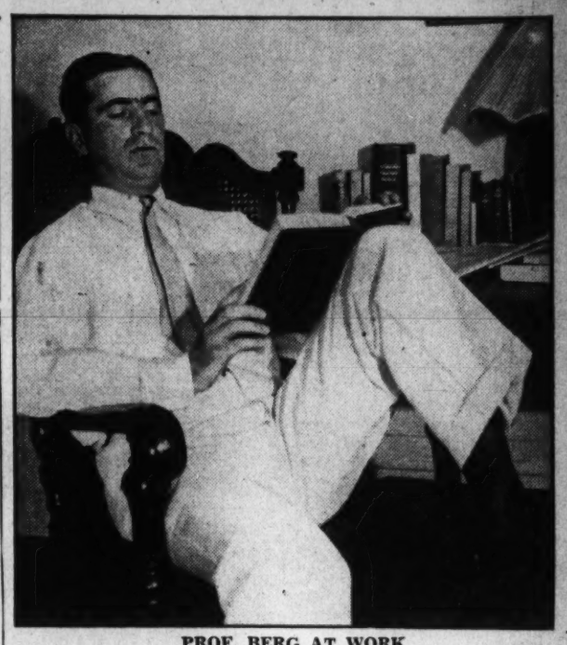
Many times since he graduated with high honors from Princeton and broke into baseball as a shortstop with the Brooklyn Dodgers, he has received attractive business and legal offers which he rejected because, he explained, "I would rather be a ball player than a bank president or a judge."

Berg was studying at the Sorbonne in Paris in 1924 when the Brooklyn club invited him to its spring training camp. He accepted by cable, for he planned to use his baseball earnings to continue his studies.

After being shipped to the minors by Brooklyn, Eddie Collins, purchased him from the Chicago White Sox.

He did not become a catcher until 1927, and that was by accident, for he was the only available prospect when all three of the White Sox catchers were injured on successive days.

Berg also played for Washington before joining the Red Sox in 1935. He became a coach in 1940 but was taken off the inactive list for a short time last season when Frankie Pytlak was injured.



PROF. BERG AT WORK

One of Berg's most amazing liguistic feats was gaining a working knowledge of the Japanese language while traveling to the Orient with an all-star team in 1932. Two years later, on a second trip to the Far East, he was so fluent that he was able to reply in Japanese to a welcoming address made to Connie Mack's baseball tourists.

Before leaving Japan for the second time, Berg had the unique distinction of lecturing to a group of Kieo University students. He made such a deep impression that he was invited to remain as an instructor of languages.

Today, as he quit the game he loved so dearly, Berg suffered a tragic blow in the death of his 71-year-old father at Newark, N. J., after a long illness. The elder Berg also was a master of foreign languages, reading six fluently.

Fair Grounds Track Not to Give Out Scratches in Advance

Turf Body Denies Oval Will Close

New Orleans Bars Other Information, Such as Jockeys, Etc., To Public in Advance

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Jan. 14.—The Fair Grounds Racing Association today announced that hereafter scratches would not be released at the track until 1 p. m., daily, and names of jockeys for the day's races and some other information will not be made public in advance.

Fair Grounds officials did not give the reason for the move, but it was said in racing circles that this was another skirmish in the fight with local bookmakers whose downtown activity is credited with depriving the Fair Grounds of substantial revenues.

The association brought racing back here on Christmas Day, after a year layoff, under a pari-mutuel system of wagering. Revenues have been disappointing, but officials deny that the Fair Grounds may close before the end of the season, set for February 17.

John F. Clarke, jr., chairman of the Louisiana State Racing Commission, in a public statement said:

"Despite the fact that handbooking and other forms of wagering on horse races outside the enclosure of a licensed race track is an open violation of act 127 of 1920 and act 276 of 1940, no attempt has been made to alleviate the situation," he said.

Cuban Stars Lose in Miami U. Net Play

By the Associated Press

Coral Gables, Fla., Jan. 14.—Two Cuban stars fell by the wayside, but other favored players scored easy victories today in the second annual University of Miami tennis tournament.

Billy Gillespie, Miami giant-killer, outlasted Hernando Molino, of Havana, seeded third in the foreign list, 9—7, 7—5, while Jerry Crowther, of Los Angeles, ousted Jaffre Etcheverry, also a ranking Cuban player, 6—1, 6—4.

Top-seeded Wayne Sabin, of Portland, Oreg., swept into the quarter-finals with a 6—0, 6—1 victory over Malcolm McAllister, of Miami.

Gillespie, who whipped Tommy Kahler, of Miami, 6—3, 6—2, today before meeting Etcheverry in the second round, will face Sabin tomorrow.

Jack Kramer, the Oakland, Calif., star who is seeded third, caught up with the field today by winning over William Tully, of Miami, 6—0, 6—2, and Grant Clerk, of Miami, 6—2, 6—1.

George Pero of Miami downed Jacksonville's city champion, Bob Dickson, 6-3, 5-7, 6-2, in a match that previously had been given to Dickson by default. Pero appeared for the match today and Dickson agreed to play.

Pero was eliminated in the second round, however, by Ecuador's up and coming Francisco Segura who scored in straight sets, 6-1, 6-3.

The last remaining first round match puts George Lyttleton-Rodgers, former Irish Davis cupper, against Burton Craig of Miami, tomorrow afternoon.

Crowther will meet the winner of the Mulloy-Mincer match in the quarter-final.

U. S. Net Body May Cancel Indoor Play

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 14.—Holcombe Ward, president of the United States Lawn Tennis Association, said tonight he would ask the organization's executive committee at a meeting Saturday to cancel the indoor championships for 1942 and combine the National Outdoor Singles and Doubles Tournaments at Forest Hills.

Ward said the move would be the first in line with a policy adopted by the U. S. L. T. A. to adjust its program to the requirements of wartime.

In place of concentrating on tournament play and activity among the top-ranking players, Ward said, the National Association will try to get more persons to play tennis as a recreation, "to get people out of the grandstand and on to the courts."

The national indoor tournament was moved from New York to Oklahoma City in 1941 and earlier plans had called for staging the meet there again this year.

In past years, the singles championships have been held at the West Side Tennis Club's Forest Hills stadium and the doubles at the Longwood Cricket Club in Brookline, Mass.

Ward said the Longwood officials had offered to relinquish the doubles meet to Forest Hills this year to cooperate in the planned readjustment and because the West Side Club will be celebrating its fiftieth anniversary.

De Kalb Captures Hialeah Feature

worth $26.70 for $2. The second choice, Mrs. G. C. Winfrey's Aboyne, was second and J. W. Dial's Llanero was third. Aboyne paid $3.90 and $3.30 while Llanero returned $11.20. Allesandro's place and show prices were $8.40 and $4.80.

Trainer G. W. Carroll had entered Market Wise in both the Inaugural and the Secondary, and decided definitely only this morning to go after what appeared to be a more certain victory in the race of lesser importance.

De Kalb, known for his high speed, broke like a bullet and opened up several lengths in short order. Even the fleet "darling of the turf," Sweet Willow, could not keep close to the graduate of the claiming ranks and finally gave up the ghost. De Kalb had to be placed under a drive in the last furlong when The Chief, in a running mood after starting far back, closed with a rush that proved slightly too much for the forward running Sheriff Culkin.

Hillock, Karas Pace School Cage Scorers

Don Hillock, Woodrow Wilson's clever scoring machine, boasts the best percentage, but Western's Jimmy Karas has the most points in this week's compilation of basketball scoring by Washington and vicinity schoolboys.

Hillock's 51 points in four games—he missed one of the Tigers' five winning starts with a cut hand—earns him top place with an average of 12.75 points per game. Karas rests in third place on percentage, but his 71 counters in six games is high for all scholastic cagers in this area.

Delos (Cotton) Smith, Sidwell-Friends School veteran, has an even 12-point average in three games to hold a slim margin in second, ahead of Karas.

Cue Queen Shows Men How It's Done

Ruth McGinnis, 30-year-old graduate of East Stroudsburg (Pa.) Teachers College, wields a southpaw cue to drop the 4-ball in a match yesterday after winning in the third round of the New York State pocket billiards title meet in Gotham. She defeated Ray St. Laurent, of Brooklyn, 125 to 62. She is hailed as the first woman to compete in a major tournament

Ray Steele, Strangler Lewis Wrestle at Turner's Tonight

Time-Limit of 1 Hour Set on Match; Mildred Burke Engages Gladys Gillem

Two former wrestling champions, one of 'em regarded as the greatest since the immortal Frank Gotch, will headline tonight's show at Turner's Arena. They are Ed (Strangler) Lewis, the mighty champion of the 20's and early 30's, and Ray Steele, the erstwhile National Wrestling Association titleholder.

They will meet in a one-hour time limit brawl in a revival of an ancient rivalry. The grapplers will battle in regular wrestling shoes, as contrasted to their bare feet in the last scrap in Madison Square Garden, N. Y., about eight years ago.

Promoter Joe Turner recalled that the canvas blistered Steele's feet so badly that night he completely "lost his head," and tried to murder the Strangler. The result was that Steele got disqualified.

Tonight Steele will be the favorite, and should he win, will avenge the New York as well as the Chicago defeats.

Women Wrestle

A feminine championship bout is on the card, with Mildred Burke, pretty St. Louis titleholder, risking her crown against Gladys Gillem, Oklahoma City cowgirl. Miss Burke is seeking her thirteenth straight local triumph.

In other bouts Milo Steinborn will take on Roy Reynolds, Frank Judson will engage Cowboy Luttrell and Emil Dusek will meet Fred Grobmier. The first match is set for 8:45.

There is nothing definite regarding the referee for the Steele-Lewis battle. Pinky Gardner, former champion, declined the offer to referee, saying business would prevent him from coming here and Promoter Turner, who had been asked by friends to do the officiating, said that even the wrestlers wouldn't know the referee until gong time. He'll be either Benny Bortnick, the watermelon king; Casey Berger, Cyclone Burns, of Baltimore, or Promoter Turner.

The Strangler is doing a comeback, and already has visitors, who just reached up and dumped in another two-pointer within the space of two seconds. In the second half Berry took the ball off the backboard after an unproductive St. Francis shot and passed under the basket to Cousin Kitiko, who again reached up and flipped home another two-pointer.

Boys Are Individual

The Explorers missed a half-dozen or more virtually sure baskets by their individual style of play, as in their hurry for self honors they'd often take a wild shot or unnecessary dribble with a teammate wide open under the basket and screaming for a pass.

Lenny Stanton, who used his reach for five field goals and two fouls tied Viani's 12 points for scoring honors. The latter was withdrawn by Coach Ben Kail in the second half with three fouls but upon his return sparked the winning rally.

Ice Palace Ladies Win Three More

Olive Pettit helped her Ice Palace teammates retain the lead in the Ladies' District Duckpin League last night with a 371 set as Convention Hall dropped all three games to the first-place team. Boots Lewis had 354 for the losers.

Anna Daut posted the high set of the night, a 374 which helped Clarendon score a shutout triumph over Rendezvous, despite Irene Scott's 364 for the losers.

Lafayette won three over Del Ray while odd game victories of 2 to 1 were returned by Rosslyn over Brookland; Spillway over Arcadia; Red Circle over Hy-Skor and King Pin over Arlington.

have been walloping local high prep and outstanding club teams by one-sided margins. The G. U. cubs, also coached by Ripley, will be out to do something about the two defeats the Art Zahn coached Little Colonials handed them last year, and may do it as they are ranked among the best freshman court clubs at the Hilltop in years. The frosh will play at 7:15 and 100-pound parochial league teams will play between halves of the preliminary and varsity contests.

Georgetown, city champion last year with its 51-42 and 41-34 victories over the Colonials, will carry a three-game intracity series winning streak into the game. The Hoyas also won the second game of the 1939-40 series, 43-39, after losing the first, 49-41. G. W. won the only 1938-39 season battle, 39-26, as the modern series was renewed. There was a 16-year lapse from the 1923 game.

The officiating will be in the hands of Paul Menton, Baltimore, and Al Doran, G. W. High coach.

Ripley has no alternative but to start Charley Schmidli and Kenny Engles at forward; Bill Bornheimer, center, and Buddy O'Grady and Don Martin at guard. Danny Gabbianelli will be the first reserve choice. Reinhart will floor Matt Zunic and Roy McNeil at forward, Sophomore Ed Gustafson at center and Bobby Gilham at guard, with either Joey Gallagher or Jim Myers.

The outstanding individual stars are Zunic, whose press reports label him as likely All-American candidate for G. W., and O'Grady, G. U.'s smooth guard whose ball-handling tricks are the best seen locally in many years.

Zunic has scored 94 points in seven games, or better than a 13 average, while Bornheimer, the big ball hawk of G. U., has scored 60 in six, 23 of them against A. U. O'Grady has dropped 49 points in for second on the Hoyas' squad, while Gustafson's 39-point total is second to Zunic on the G Street squad.

Heavyweight King Becomes Pvt. Barrow was fingerprinted, listened to the reading of the articles of war, and with the others, witnessed educational movies on military courtesy and sex hygiene.

If Louis gets three hours sleep tonight, he'll be lucky. He must report at 6:25 a. m. Bleak dawn will not yet be alighting the barren Long Island camp when he formally goes in training for the gravest and worst-paid fight of his life.

He'll be fitted into khaki uniform—though he ordered his uniforms tailor-made early this week—and with the first sound of reveille he'll be embarked on the problem of learning how to fight with guns, grenades and bayonets instead of with the fists that jerked him from hopeless poverty and obscurity to the heavyweight championship of the world.

Joe's training tomorrow, or "processing" as it is called, will include further intelligence tests, instructions in how to make his bed and sweep around it and he will expose his famed biceps to the needles of smallpox, pneumonia, typhoid and tetanus innoculations. His pay, $21 a month, begins at dawn.

Accompanied to Camp

Mike Jacobs, Julian Black and others who have grown rich on the millions of dollars of business stirred up by Louis' fists, accompanied the Bomber to camp this morning. Jacobs hired a big bus and filled it with reporters and cameramen. None of the reporters was able to speak to Louis, once he disappeared into the warehouse and joined the slightly ragamuffin men who had made the trip to Upton by train. The soldiers whistled appreciatively at Jacobs' robin's egg blue custom sedan, which headed the little entourage, and were no less impressed with the sedan which bore Uncle Sam's latest soldier.

Besides the pork chops, Joe lunched on puree of bean soup mashed potatoes, Harvard beets, combination salad, plain cake, bread, butter and milk. His breakfast tomorrow morning will consist of a hot cereal, a piece of fresh fruit, toast and coffee. Officials said the camp would have no trouble finding a pair of shoes for him. Joe wears size 12½.

His future fighting plans are pretty much up in the air. But it is expected that when he completes his 13 weeks of training he will be given a month furlough to get ready to fight either Melio Bettina or Gus Lesnevich for the Army relief fund.

Washington Defense

Put Out Lights Not Needed, Bolles Urges

Col. Lemuel Bolles, coordinator of civilian defense, made an impassioned plea last night at a mass meeting of deputy air wardens urging Washingtonians to dispense with all unnecessary lights.

Bolles made his speech in the District Building after a deputy warden, J. Louis Gelbman, 1105 Alabama Avenue Southeast, took the floor to object to a big red sign displayed in Southeast Washington. Gelbman said he thought the sign was unnecessary in time of war. Heated argument followed regarding signs and then Bolles took the floor.

"Ladies and gentlemen," Bolles said, "do you know that Washington lights up like a volcano 20 miles away? Enemy planes can turn their motors off as far away as Mt. Vernon, come in silently over this city and drop their deadly loads. These big, unnecessary lights would serve as a beacon. We are at war and in close proximity to danger.

"Actually, we cannot get our lights off soon enough after a plane has been identified. This city is wide open—a million people are in danger here. And I want to say one thing from the heart: if you have never seen men and women die violent death you can't realize what it means. So, for God's sake don't design anything that will encourage bombings!"

Bolles said he hopes that within a few weeks the Commissioners will be armed with regulations standardizing lighting here. Meantime, he urged the wardens to be lenient in asking merchants and others to put out their lights.

Clement Murphy, chief air raid warden, said neon signs are not necessary for display purposes.

Victory Sidelights

Women Asked to Replace Drafted Farmers

Immediate organization of a woman's land army to replace agricultural workers called to military duty from Maryland and Virginia was announced yesterday by the American Women's Voluntary Services.

Recruits for a course starting at the University of Maryland on February 9 were called for by Mrs. L. Corrin Strong, chairman of agriculture and nutrition. Both full and part-time workers are needed, she said.

Three classes of workers are wanted: Those who can give full time for period of a month or more; those who can give a minimum of two half days a week to work on farms in counties adjacent to Washington, and those willing to donate their vacations to seasonal harvesting jobs.

Dr. H. C. Byrd, Maryland University president, said the first course will be in vegetable production and processing. All courses will be taught by specialists. Giving classes in their respective fields will be: Dr. T. B. Symons, Dr. C. H. Mahoney, Dr. M. A. Juli and Dr. K. L. Turk.

Joseph Beards, county agent of Fairfax County, is working out plans for starting courses for volunteers who had rather work in Maryland.

A sour note came from Kansas, where R. H. Vawter, member of the State board of agriculture, took a pessimistic view of the suggestion that town girls be organized to help out.

"That's the silliest thing I ever heard of," he exploded to newsmen. "Our wives would run them off the farms, even if the girls were so foolish as to consent to come."

Coal Consumers Urged to Stock Up

Luther Harr, Bituminous Coal Consumers' counsel, yesterday reminded the public that in view of the emergency and possible rationing of coal that they should stock up now instead of waiting. In his statement, Harr pointed out that while the supply is plentiful now the possibility of the individual consumer giving priority to the Government for defense may not be too far off.

Chevy Chase Group Raises Defense Fund

The Chevy Chase Businessmen's Association yesterday raised a fund of $100 to defray current expenses of the Civil Defense Committee of the Chevy Chase area.

J. H. Heiser was named president in the annual election. Other officers are S. F. Higger, first vice president; E. M. Schwartz, second vice president; S. M. Ponker, secretary, and M. P. Freeman, treasurer.

Any organization in the Chevy Chase area wishing to assist in defraying civilian defense costs should get in touch with Morris Blumenthal, Woodley 4500, or J. M. Heiser, Emerson 5540.

North Randle Member Drive on for Defense

A 90-day membership drive with half of the membership dues going to civilian defense in that area was announced at last night's meeting of the North Randle Citizens' Association in the school building at Minnesota Avenue and E Street Southeast.

Most of the meeting was given over to defense topics and it was announced that Mrs. Clara D. Chroniger, 732 Thirty-second Street Southeast, had accepted chairmanship of a committee to organize women for civilian police work, and that Mrs. Henry Rogers, 3215 Massachusetts Avenue Southeast, had been placed in charge ofthe emergency mass-feeding committee for that area.

The association adopted a resolution urging appropriations with which to buy furniture for the new North Randle Elementary School, now under construction, and decided to send a letter of commendation to the Visiting Nurse Society of Mrs. Dorothy Miller, who has been active in that area for 15 years and who will soon retire.

Lusk in Quandary Over His Oaths

Rufus Lusk, of the Washington Taxpayers Association, has another problem on his hands. As a deputy air-raid warden, it's Lusk's job to call at all office buildings housing British personnel, and administer the oath of allegiance to British army officers who want to serve as air-raid wardens.

"But," said Lusk, "the only difficulty is that all these British generals owe their allegiance to His Majesty, the King of Great Britain. So, how can I ask them to swear allegiance only to the United States under our constitution?"

No one offered a solution.

Curran Urges Fair Play For Aliens

A warning that unfair discrimination against aliens living in this country would do more harm than good to the United States war effort was issued last night by United States Attorney Edward M. Curran in a radio broadcast over Station WMAL.

In an address explaining the legal steps taken by the Department of Justice for the regulation of enemy aliens during wartime, Curran asked tolerance toward noncitizens, declaring that only a very small percentage of these could be considered disloyal to America.

"Every American will share in the task of defending our country," he asserted. "This means, above all, keeping our heads, keeping our tempers and keeping clearly in mind what we are defending—freedom, justice, decency."

He outlined the governmental restrictions on enemy aliens which bar from their possession cameras, firearms and short-wave radios; require that a week's advance notice be given when an enemy alien desires to travel; set up alien enemy hearing boards to hear cases of aliens suspected of disloyal activities; and provide for the internment of aliens found guilty of such acts.

He added, however, that such restrictions "should not be considered a reflection on the loyalty of the vast majority of German, Italian and Japanese aliens in this country."

Moreover, aliens should not be denied employment—even in defense factories—simply because of their race or national origin, he declared. He pointed out that this would heighten labor shortages and that "no more effective way could be found to make aliens willing to listen to those who work for disunion than to deprive them of the means of livelihood."

Delay Seen In Presentation Of Tax Plan

Formal Treasury presentation of the President's nine-billion-dollar tax program to Congress may not come before February, it was indicated last night, as representatives of the department continued to confer with Congressional tax experts on preliminary schedules.

Chairman Doughton said his Ways and Means Committee will be summoned "as soon as the Treasury is ready" but expressed doubt this would be before the end of the month.

In other quarters it was indicated that first Congressional tax explorations will be undertaken in the field of excess profits, where rates may be stepped up and other adjustments made in an effort to recapture more profits from war contracts.

The two billion dollars asked by the President to finance Social Security expansion is expected to be delayed until completion of the first general revenue measure. The general bill, which may rake all sources from excises and gross income to corporate loopholes in a search for the revenue asked by the President, may never reach the seven billion dollar figure, in the opinion of some Congressional tax experts. They have consistently refused to set a figure goal for the program, substituting an "all that the machine will bear" standard.

Bandits Take $64 InCleaningStore Holdup

The branch store of Aristo Cleaners and Dyers at 2122 Eighteenth Street Northwest, was robbed last night by three men who looted the cash register of $24 and fled with a pocketbook containing $40.

The purse was owned by Mrs. Louise Ingley, 2109 Eighteenth Street Northwest, a clerk in the store, who was alone when the bandits entered.

LaGuardia Criticizes Makeup Of District Defense Council

District defense and civilian morale problems were spotlighted on Capitol Hill yesterday when Mayor LaGuardia, director of the Office of Civilian Defense, told the Tolan subcommittee he did not like the manner in which the District Defense Council is organized.

"The District defense officials have done an excellent job and still are," Director LaGuardia said, "but I think they should follow the national plan of organization. I believe fire wardens should be under police, the fire auxiliary under the fire department, and the emergency medical services under the regular hospital or health department."

District fire wardens now are headed by Deputy Fire Chief Clement Murphy and emergency medical services are under Dr. John A. Reed, superivsor of the fire-police clinic.

"Careful Thought"

Commissioner John Russell Young, Coordinator of Defense for Metropolitan Washington, last night assured that LaGuardia's recommendations would be given "careful thought."

Director LaGuardia declared Congress "has not done its duty by the District of Columbia."

"You must give them more policemen, more firemen, more equipment, and certainly you must give them emergency fire-fighting hose," he said. "It's a false economy not to buy them the hose."

Mrs. Roosevelt told the subcommittee the District had long had urgent housing and welfare problems, but that they are much worse now. Housing at low-price levels is "unspeakable" for white people, she said, and even worse for Negroes.

Negro workers in the Government, she declared, often find it impossible to get lunch in the time assigned to them "because they can't find places that will serve them."

Walk for Blocks

"Sometimes they walk blocks and can get nothing. It's all very well to say they can go into the drug stores, but it's another thing for them to get served," she said.

"I think such treatment has a weakening effect on the whole city. In the District the highest tuberculosis and syphilis rates will be found among the colored," she said, reiterating her belief that anything which weakens one segment of a population or gives it a sense of frustration is bad for defense.

"Your people must feel secure to make the whole defense of the Nation strong. If you have a family or a group that is insecure, you weaken the whole defense," she declared.

In making his plea for more fire-fighting equipment for the District, LaGuardia warned against a false feeling of security.

"Washington is not a difficult target to find, you know. I think even I could spot Washington from the air," he said, and I was the worst flyer in the A. E. F."

Ousted Tenant Sues Landlords For $75,000

Another dispute between an ousted Dupont Circle Apartments tenant and the apartment owners was brought into District Court yesterday when the former operator of a newsstand and luncheonette in the building's lobby filed suit for $75,000 damages against Dupont Circle, Inc.

The merchant, Charles A. Brown, of 1630 Irving Street Northwest, said the landlords had removed all of his merchandise, fixtures and personal property from the lobby in spite of a lease which did not expire until March, 1943. According to his attorney, Philip Goldstein, Brown closed the stand up the night of December 20, 1941, and when he came down Monday morning to open the place up for business, there wasn't any stand there.

The suit charges personal embarrassment and damages to his standing with creditors and wholesalers, as well as accusing the owners of wrongfully depriving him of his business. He also alleges that perishable merchandise has been spoiled and his fixtures damaged.

Brown is asking $50,000 payment for actual damage and $25,000 more in punitive damages.

Roosevelt Urges Congress Reduce Private Measures

"To save motion" in Government operations, President Roosevelt yesterday asked Congress to reduce drastically the time-consuming total of 2000 or more private claim bills introduced in each Congress.

Mr. Roosevelt suggested that the executive departments and independent Government establishments be authorized to adjust tort claims up to $1000, with review by the Attorney General of awards over $500, eliminating the present necessity for a special specific Congressional enactment to cover each case.

The President pointed out that more than one-third of the total number of measures he had been obliged to veto during the past three Congresses were private-claim bills.

Mr. Roosevelt, in another request for simplification of procedure, suggested that the Secretary of War be authorized to pass on applications for construction of bridges over navigible streams. Under the present system Congress must pass a bill authorizing each bridge.

Haworth Elected New President Of Baltic Group

Dr. Ellis Haworth was elected president of the Baltic American Society of Washington Monday at a special meeting in the International Student House, 1708 New Hempshire Avenue Northwest.

Other officers elected were Frederick Schoning, first vice president; Amelia Regutsi, second vice president; Dr. Leonid Strakhovsky, third vice president; Reino Luoma, fourth vice president; Ivan Luht, fifth vice president; L. J. Esunas, secretary general; Ludmilla Floss, social secretary; Ludmilla Jay, treasurer; Christine Kelley, recording secretary. Dr. William Perau, sergeant at arms; J. J. Strikol, Mrs. Everett Amsley, Otto B. Beyer, Lowo Ranta, members at large, executive board.

Transportation Survey Urged At Citizens' Meeting

The Rhode Island Citizens Association admitted seven new members last night to reach a total paid-up membership of exactly 1000.

Gregory Hankin, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, addressed the meeting, held in the Woodridge Sub Branch Library. He urged an origin and destination survey of the transportation situation here and suggested such a survey be made a "continuing" affair.

John L. Fowler was reelected president of the association for the coming year. Other officers elected: Kenneth C. Buker, first vice president; Mrs. Eppa L. Norris, second vice president; Wallace E. Perry, secretary; Charles F. Green, financial secretary; Mrs. Mattie A. Williams, assistant secretary; A. A. Duerksen, treasurer, and W. L. Howenstine and Fred T. Devine, delegates to the Federation of Citizens Associations.

Night Fire Routs Three, Razes Md. Farm Home

Special Dispatch to The Post

Frederick, Md., Jan. 14.—Fire destroyed the 100-year-old farm house of Martin Stockman, near Mount Philip, Monday night. Stockman, his wife and son, Guy, were forced to flee from their beds. Firemen from Frederick were delayed in reaching the scene because of icy country roads. The home was burned to the ground along with all personal possessions of the family. An overheated stove is believed to have started the blaze.

Safety Society Hears Plan ForEmergency

Plans which the Office of Civilian Defense had ready for defense organizations on December 7 were cited last night at a meeting of the Washington Safety Society as "proof that the OCD did not bog down."

The speaker was Commander S. J. Singer, U. S. N., an official in the OCD, who said that agency was ready when Japan attacked Pearl Harbor although many civilian organizations and centers weren't.

He admitted that civilian defense could be more effective, but refused to place the responsibility on OCD, citing as one reason the changes made in OCD plans as they pass through the various States down into the cities and small communities.

Defines Objective

"The whole aim of civilian defense," he declared, "is to have the people organized so they can control and minimize damage."

The guiding principle of civilian defense, Commander Singer told some 40 members of the society at its monthly dinner meeting in the Government Printing Office, is:

"It's better to have it and not need it, than it is to need it and not have it."

He described air-raid wardens as "the basis of civilian defense" and defined a warden "as a combination of a Fuller Brush salesman and a Tammany district captain."

A. C. Maher, safety engineer at the National Airport, reported the organization there of "a comprehensive precautionary air-raid organization."

Edward Grannis, manager of the national bureau for the protection of industrial plants, presided.

Theft of Tools Slows Up Work On War Orders

Detroit, Jan. 14 (AP).—The story of how two veteran gear and axle workers held up Chevrolet retooling and war production by theft of plant tools and materials for use in their own private shops was unfolded today in recorder's court.

The craftsmen, John Diegel, 46, and Leslie E. Ruggles, 42, pleaded guilty to simple larceny charges. They disclosed that they held Government subcontracts on war work, using the stolen tools. Diegel testified he had made a $4000 profit on his shop last year.

A Chevrolet official testified that "several hundred dollars' worth of tools" were recovered from the shops of both men. The State charged that the tools' disappearance held up retooling, put several hundred men out of work and delayed the filling of large war orders.

N.E. Citizens Ask Successor for School Official

A resolution asking the District court to appoint a member of the Board of Education to succeed Col. West Hamilton, on active duty with the Army, was adopted last night by the Northeast Boundary Citizens Association, H. C. Woodson, president, reported.

Woodson said Col. Hamilton has been on active duty with the Army for more than a year and "is not likely to return soon."

The association, meeting at Burville School, also asked the Board of Education to appoint an additional assistant superintendent for divisions 10 to 13.

Chief Air Raid Warden Resigns in Alexandria

Gardner L. Boothe, chairman of the Northern Virginia Regional Defense Council, yesterday announced the resignation of Robert T. Atkinson as chief air raid warden for the City of Alexandria.

The reason given by Atkinson for his resignation was that he was unable to give enough time to the duties and that the job required someone who could give practically all his time to the position.

24-Hour Watch Relaxed at All But 18 Schools

The Commissioners last night relaxed the 24-hour "defense" watch on all but 18 public schools.

In the face of mounting criticism of the recent order compelling school teachers to keep a day and night vigilance on school properties, Commissioner John Russell Young, United States Defense Coordinator, announced a "compromise."

The 24-hour service, with volunteer help, will be maintained on the following school buildings:

Woodrow Wilson High School, Western High School, Francis Junior High School, Central High School, Banneker Junior High School, Shaw Junior High School, Jefferson Junior High School, Randall Junior High School, Roosevelt High School, Calvin Junior High School, McKinley High School, Taft Junior High School.

Armstrong High School, Eastern High School, Hine Junior High School, Chamberlain Vocational School, Phelps Vocational School and the Anacostia Junior-Senior High School.

Small Plants May Get 1% of Key Materials

Floyd B. Odlum, OPM's contract distribution director, disclosed to the House Small Business Committee yesterday that he has presented to his superiors a plan for keeping priorities from shutting down small manufacturers by setting aside for them a reserve of 1 per cent of the estimated 1942 supply of scarce materials.

The plan, now being studied by OPM's industry committees, is aimed at making it possible for small businesses to maintain themselves as going concerns until they can be brought into the war production program or assigned essential civilian work, Odlum explained.

Under no circumstances, Odlum declared, would manufacturers be permitted to use scarce materials in cases where substitutes are available or when the supply of critical materials is sufficient only for military production.

Small business, Odlum explained, would be defined, under his plan, by OPM Director General Knudsen working through industry branches. Definitions would be related to the vaule of product, or number of employes or framed to include smaller enterprises in each industry that together represent 5 per cent of the total value of the industry's product.

Frankly, Odlum told the committee that he saw little hope for full operation of small plants on war contracts. He declared:

"Civilian production is the job for small business . . . If it is left for small business to get into war production, then I am afraid it will die, because I am afraid it will not get in in time."

Rhodes Named Assistant Chief Of Staff of 29th

Maj. Cooper B. Rhodes, of 2301 Cathedral Avenue, yesterday became assistant chief of staff of the Twenty-ninth Division in two changes announced at Fort George G. Meade by Brig. Gen. Amos W. W. Woodcock.

A member of the Washington law firm of Rhodes, Klepinger and Rhodes, Maj. Rhodes is well known in Washington, where he was chairman of the young Republican organization during the last Presidential campaign. His entry into the Army was via the National Guard, in which he had been active for many years.

Lieut. Col. Herbert L. Grymes, of Baltimore, assistant chief of staff, was named assistant chief of staff for intelligence.

Death Denies Col. R. R. Farr Assembly Seat

Col. Richard Ratcliffe Farr, 60, of Fairfax, Va., died yesterday at Georgetown Hospital on the day he was to have begun his term as Fairfax County's delegate to the State Legislature at Richmond.

The delegate-elect had been ill of pneumonia and complications since November 11, a week after he won the Fairfax County election by 189 votes after a warm campaign. Col. Farr, a Republican, defeated Francis Pickens Miller, Democrat, in a political upset.

Col. Farr's victory at the polls in November marked his second attempt to win the delegate's seat. He lost in 1939 to Miller by only 79 votes.

The death of Col. Farr leaves Fairfax County unrepresented in the State Legislature, which convened at noon yesterday. A special election is necessary to choose a successor.

Surviving Col. Farr are his wife, Mrs. Viola Merigold Farr, whom he married in 1928; three brothers, Wilson M. Farr, of Fairfax; Rezin A. Farr, of Washington, and John Farr, of Philadelphia, and a sister, Mrs. Margaret Franzoni, of Washington.

Services will be held at 10 a. m. Saturday at the home. Burial will be at the Fairfax Cemetery.

Dr. Joseph Becker, G. W. U. Graduate, Dies at 36

Dr. Joseph M. Becker, of 2028 Sixteenth Street Northwest, died yesterday. He was 36.

He was a graduate of George Washington University and Georgetown University Medical School and had served his internship at Emergency Hospital.

Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Dora Becker; a sister, Sarah, and three brothers, Dr. Samuel M., William and Philip. Services will be held at Danzansky's funeral home, 3501 Fourteenth Street Northwest, at 11 a. m. Friday.

Song Is Ended

Fred Fisher Dead; Wrote 'Dardenella'

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 14.—Song Writer Fred Fisher, 65, who wrote many of the Nation's biggest hits and composed gay lyrics through years of ill health, was found dead today, his body hanging in the bedroom of his penthouse apartment.

His greatest success as a lyric writer was "Dardenella," which sold 6,500,000 phonograph records and set an all-time high for sales of popular music.

Police reported finding a note near the body, reading in part, "no one is responsible." The rest of the contents was withheld.

He had breakfasted with his family as usual. Later, a son, Marvin, found his body.

Other Fisher songs included "Ireland Must Be Heaven," "Peg O' My Heart," "Fifty Million Frenchmen," "Auf Wiedersehn," "Ma, He's Making Eyes At Me," "Any Little Girl That's a Nice Little Girl," and "They Go Wild, Simply Wild, Over Me."

When deflation struck the sheet-music business, Fisher went to Hollywood to write musical settings for motion pictures, but soon returned to New York to continue as active head of his publishing house.

Fisher was born in Germany while his American parents were in that country. He entered the German navy at the age of 14 and later served in the French Foreign Legion before he settled in the United States.

His first big hit came in 1902, when he turned out "If the Man in the Moon Was a Coon," which sold more than one million copies.

Several years ago Fisher collaborated with the wife of the late Lou Gehrig in writing, "I Can't Get to First Base With You."

Fisher reportedly took pride in admitting that he used melodies from well-known composers, and once told a film producer, "When you buy me you're buying Chopin, Liszt and Mozart. You're getting the very best."

Noted for his love of gags, Fisher would sometimes burn a $5 bill while talking to a friend, or take off his shoe laces and slowly cut them to pieces.

Board Outlines Post-Wartime 'Bill of Rights'

By the Associated Press

Nine "Freedoms," including the right to work and the right to security, and a universal 40-hour week for labor, were proposed by the National Resources and Planning Board yesterday in a report on planning for post-war America.

President Roosevelt transmitted the report to Congress as one outlining "some of our major objectives in planning to win the peace."

The board declared, "we must plan for full employment, for maintaining the national income at 100 billion dollars a year, at least, rather than to let it slip back to 80 or 70, or 60 billion dollars again."

The nine freedoms, amplifying the Roosevelt-Churchill "Atlantic Charter," were outlined as follows:

1. The right to work, usefully and creatively, through the productive years.

2. The right to fair play, adequate to command the necessities and amenities of life in exchange for work, ideas, thrift, and other socially valuable service.

3. The right to adequate food, clothing, shelter, and medical care.

Free Enterprise

4. The right to security, with freedom from fear of old age, want, dependency, sickness, unemployment, and accident.

5. The right to live in a system of free enterprise, free from compulsory labor, irresponsible private power, arbitrary public authority and unregulated monopolies.

6. The right to come and go, to speak or to be silent, free from the spyings of secret political police.

7. The right to equality before the law, with equal access to justice in fact.

8. The right to education, for work, for citizenship, and for personal growth and happiness.

9. The right to rest, recreation, and adventure; the opportunity to enjoy life and take part in an advancing civilization.

President Roosevelt said in his message of transmittal that "plans and programs to win the war and to win the peace must grow out of our common national purpose and with democratic participation in planning by all of us." He added:

"Through efforts to state our objectives and public discussion of their merits, we play our part as free citizens."

Hope to Prevent Boom

The planning board said there was "no necessity" for a postwar economic collapse if appropriate action is taken now.

Saying that some people were hoping for a postwar boom, the report expressed concern over the possibility that accumulated shortages in residential housing, in durable consumers' goods such as automobiles, and in plants and equipment required to supply peacetime consumption demands might cause postwar inflation.

Sooner or later, the board said, "such a boom would end in a depression" unless forehanded action is taken.

The report predicted that within two or three years, under the war effort, "every available person would be at work, thus erasing unemployment."

Alcoa Counsel Denies Monopoly Case

William Watson Smith, counsel for the Aluminum Co. of America, denied yesterday Asssistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold's assertion before a Congressional committee that the company had exercised a 100 per cent control over aluminum in this country.

"It had never had such control," Smith said in a statement prepared for a House Military Sub-Committee before which Arnold appeared as part of its inquiry into cooperation of business in the Nation's defense program.

Arnold had mentioned the Aluminum Co. to illustrate his argument that international cartels, controlling production of metals, had placed this country in a disadvantageous position for full utilization of its productive capacity.

"Except during wartimes," Smith said, "the Aluminum Co., for many years past, has encountered active competition in the United States market from importations of foreign aluminum in the United States."

"It is hard to please Mr. Arnold," Smith said in discussing the assistant Attorney General's comments on reduced aluminum prices. "If the Aluminum Co. increases its prices, he criticizes it on the ground that it is extorting money from the public. If the company reduces prices, he critizes it on the ground that it is trying to affect the result of a lawsuit."

ICC Control of Truck Load Limits Urged

A spokesman for the National Industrial Traffic League urged yesterday that the Interstate Commerce Commission be given authority to fix maximum size and weight limitations on trucks moving across State lines, but asked that the authority be strictly limited.

The league's position was presented to a Senate Interstate Commerce Subcommittee by L. F. Orr, of St. Louis, at a hearing on legislation which would give the ICC jurisdiction over truck sizes and weights, now a province of State legislatures.

Orr said the league favored letting the ICC increase existing State limits up to "safe and sound standards recommended by highway engineering and safety authorities" but did "not favor any further veto power being granted Federal authority than is necessary to accomplish this purpose."

OPM Plans Curtailment of Radio Output

OPM officials said yesterday a program curtailing radio production for civilian use was being developed but that no Government order halting such productior entirely was contemplated.

The restrictions, necessitated by shortages of materials, probably will be less drastic than those imposed on other industries thus far in the defense program, it was said, and the capacity of the radio industry to fill civilian orders will depend largely on military demands for radio equipment and the speed with which the manufacturers could handle them.

Details of the curtailment have not yet been completed, officials added. They have been under study since early December.

OPM said the industry had reported sales approximating 13 million radio sets in 1941—its biggest year in dollar volume since 1929.

Interest Payments on Philippine Bonds to Continue

Secretary of Interior Ickes announced yesterday that interest payments on outstanding bonds of the Philippine Government would continue to be met and serviced through the United States Treasury.

On recommendation of Philippine President Manuel L. Quezon, Ickes said, almost two million dollars will be paid during 1942 as interest on obligations. These payments will be made from funds of the Philippine commonwealth on deposit in this country. No payment of principal is due until 1946.

Philippine securities are under strict control through the freezing regulation imposed at the direction of the President. In order to permit these payments, the Treasury Department will issue a central license authorizing the detachments of coupons from the securities and the presentation of these coupons for collection.

D. C. Depositors Will Get Checks, Starting Monday

Checks for final dividends to depositors in two closed Washington banks will be available in several weeks, according to John F. Moran, receiver for the North Capitol Savings Bank and the Park Savings Bank.

Mr. Moran said yesterday that payment to North Capitol Bank claimants will start next Monday but that distribution of Park Savings dividends will be delayed until after February 1. He emphasized that the job of drawing about 18,000 checks will take time and said that all depositors will be notified by mail as soon as checks are available.

The final dividends amount to 5.39 per cent for North Capitol depositors and 4.18 per cent for Park Savings claimants.

A news story published yesterday in The Post should have read that final dividends were authorized, not paid, in December.

New York Cotton

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—Cotton futures dropped as much as 65 cents a bale today before steady trade buying made itself felt. The market closed unchanged to 10 cents a bale higher.

A good part of the buying was believed to be in anticipation of huge Government orders for cotton cloth.

Early selling was influenced by announcement the Government would begin to sell certain grades of cotton on January 19. Uncertainty over price legislation was also a deterrent to demand.

Port receipts Tuesday, 17,600 bales; port stocks, 3,390,196.

January Sales Of Defense Bonds May Hit New High

By the Associated Press

Early reports on January sales of defense bonds indicated a new record may be hung up this month.

In the first ten days of the month, sales averaged $29,500,000 per day, including Sundays and holidays. If this average were maintained, the January total might reach 900 million dollars, or nearly 400 million more than the record set in December, the first month of the war.

A major reason for the large January sales was the fact that many persons who reached the legal limit of defense bond purchases several months ago now have a new year's quota open to them. The limit is $5000 per person on Series E bonds and $50,000 on Series F or G or any combination of F and G per year.

Retailers Hear Ways to Curb U. S. Inflation

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 14. — M. S. Szymczak, member of the Federal Reserve System's board of governors, tonight suggested price ceilings accompanied by rationing and taxes or Government borrowing against current earnings of individuals as methods of preventing inflation.

Szymczak, estimating that Government exoenditures for the fiscal year beginning next July may reach 60 billion dollars, said in an address prepared for delivery before the National Retail Dry Goods Association convention:

Against this, present Federal taxes may be expected to bring in perhaps 18 billion dollars in the next fiscal year, so that even a very large increase in taxes will leave a tremendous gap to be filled by borrowing. . . . The inflation potential ahead is tremendous."

Two-Front Attack

As an alternative to inflation, which he said would interrupt the war effort and tend to disrupt economic life now and in the postwar period, he offered two "broad lines" of attack.

"Fix price ceilings on many or all goods and supplement these ceilings by rationing the commodities whose prices are controlled," he suggested.

"Adopt an aggressive fiscal policy, supplemented by monetary controls sufficient to divert from current income enough funds to keep consumers from demanding more goods than are available at present prices.

"If we fix price ceilings but leave people with increased incomes to spend, then we must find some way of distributing fairly the limited supplies available."

Although rationing is "unattractive and difficult," he added, "it is clearly the only reasonable alternative if we choose to fight inflation primarily by the price-ceiling methods."

Reason for 'Ceilings'

Earlier, the head of one of America's largest department stores said the Office of Price Administration had imposed formal textile price ceilings only after failing in its efforts to encourage industry voluntarily to decline to increase them.

Edgar J. Kaufman, president of Kaufman Department Stores, Inc., Pittsburgh, and OPA retail consultant, told the convention:

"These (formal) ceilings were imposed after direct consultation with members of the industry so that normal methods of business might be observed and production allowed to continue to expand.

"At no time were ceilings established which would discourage needed production. I believe that the expanding importance of the war effort, now greatly accelerated, has made it necessary to make price control more and more detailed."

At first, he said, it was believed possible that requests by Price Administrator Leon Henderson would be sufficient to stem the advance in price of raw materials but "demand was too strong and formal ceilings were necessary."

Necessary Protection

Another OPA representative, James F. Bogardus, price executive of the consumers' durable goods section, said price control was necessary to stem inflation and protect honest businessmen from "chiselers."

Merchants were advised by Q. Forrest Walker, economist of R. H. Macy & Co., big New York department store, to preserve a constructive attitude toward sales prospects next spring in spite of heavy income taxes and certain dislocations arising from more priorities and restrictions.

He said rising national income probably would cause further retail sales expansion during the early part of this year.

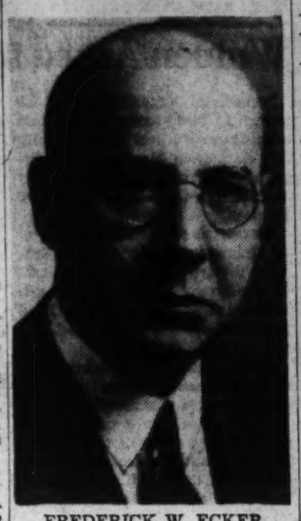
No. 11—Returns of Decedents

A return is required to be filed for a deceased individual if the gross income to the date of death is $750 or over, and the individual was single, or married and not living with husband or wife for any part of the taxable year, or if the gross income to the date of death is equal to, or in excess of the credit for personal exemption (not including credit as head of family or for dependents), and the individual was married and living with husband or wife for all or any part of the taxable year. The return for a decedent must include all items of income and deductions secured up to the date of death, regardless of the fact that the decedent may have kept his books on a cash receipts and disbursement basis or did not keep books.

The income return of a decedent for the year in which he died is considered a return for 12 months and not for a fractional part of a year, and is due on the 15th day of the third month following the close of the taxable year during which the decedent died. After his appointment and qualification, an executor or administrator may immediately file a return for the decedent without waiting for the close of the taxable year.

Special Aide To Stettinius



FREDERICK W. ECKER, vice president and director of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., has resigned to work full time as special assistant to E. R. Stettinius, jr., Federal lease-lend administrator. He is the son of Frederick H. Ecker, chairman of the insurance company, and will assume his new duties today.

Grain Trading To Pause Daily For Prayers

Chicago, Jan. 14 (AP).—All activity in the bustling grain pits of the world's largest commodity exchange ceased abruptly at 11 a. m. today.

As the huge gong which signals the start and close of trading sounded, a hush descended over the huge trading floor. Traders ceased shouting and gesticulating. The hubbub died down. All stood quietly for one minute of silent prayer for victory over the Axis powers.

The board of directors adopted a resolution effective today that daily hereafter at 11 a. m. silent prayers would be offered up for the duration of the war.

Auto Dealers Get Questionnaires

Toledo, Ohio, Jan. 14 (AP).—Questionnaires were mailed today to 40,000 automobile dealers in every State by Joseph Frazer, president of Willys-Overland Motors, asking them what machine tools suitable for armament production are in their shops.

With the cooperation of the National Association of Automobile Dealers, Willys-Overland seeks to determine the number of tools available to speed the output of war materials.

The questionnaire also asks for complete data on floor space, trained mechanics and other assets which might prove valuable in converting these small establishments to war work.

Latest Profit Statements

HAT Corporation of America and wholly owned subsidiaries reported for the fiscal year ended October 31 net profit of $590,738 (before $200,000 provision for contingencies), equal after preferred dividends to 89 cents a share on the combined class "A" and "B" stock. This compared with $664,971, or $1.03 on the combined stock, in the preceding year.

Pullman Co., sleeping car subsidiary of Pullman, Inc., reported a net loss of $256,301 from transportation operations during November, 1941, against a net loss of $156,589 in November 1940. Net income in the 11 months ended Nov. 30, 1941, totaled $1,569,942 against $1,943,957 in the like 1940 period.

A. G. Spalding & Bros., Inc., sporting goods makers, reported consolidated net income for the fiscal year ended October 31, was $427,664, equal after preferred dividend requirements to 86 cents a common share, compared with a net loss of $289,399 in the preceding fiscal year. Charles F. Robbins, president, said changes in distribution methods had resulted in a reduction of $887,000 in expenses under those of the previous year.

Superior Oil Co. of California reported for the quarter ended November 30, 1941, net profit of $1,057,345, after provision of $300,000 for Federal income taxes, or $2.50 a share on capital stock. This compared with a net loss of $13,178 in the like 1940 quarter.

Manhatton Shirt Co. reported for the year ended November 30 net income of $755,891 after all charges, equal to $3.63 a capital share. This compared with $456,915, or $2.20 a share, in the preceding year.

Stocks' Trend Indecisive in Lagging Deals

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 14.—In the path of stock market progress today were a thin flow of profit-selling and general buying apathy and the result was an indecisive and narrow swing in prices.

The profit cashing rubbed out some of the Tuesday gains in steels, coppers and rails. Rubbers, also favored the previous session, were relatively steady and minor improvement was recorded in certain aircrafts, utilities, oils and industrial specialities.

In going against the hopes of Wall Streeters who saw in Tuesday's rise a possible start of a January rally, the market appeared to be cornered again over coming tax burdens and further industrial squeezes incident to the war economy.

Favorable Comment

Plans for reorganization of the war production machinery in Washington which would make Donald M. Nelson the top man drew favorable comment in Wall Street, but brokers said the development was not an immediate market factor. Reports from the fighting areas also failed to register on the speculative impulse.

Closing mark of the Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged from the previous day at 38.9. Dealings showed fair breadth at the start, but lagged thereafter. The total was 610,100 shares, compared with 725,030 the day before.

Financial quarters, watchful of inflationary trends, noted the anti-inflationary comment of President Roosevelt on certain provisions of the pending price bill affecting farm commodity prices. The Executive's criticism seemed to put a dent in the speculative flurry in farm staple futures, but it had no echoes in the security markets.

Oil Issues Higher

Stocks in the improved division included Johns-Manville and American Can, each finishing with a gain of more than a point. Modestly higher were Texas Co., Standard Oil (N. J.), International Harvester, Douglas Aircraft, Boeing, Glenn Martin, Western Union and American Telephone.

On the soft side were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, duPont, Union Carbide, Great Northern preferred, Southern Railway and New York Central.

Chicago wheat closed up ¼ to ⅛ of a cent a bushel and corn was down ⅜ to up ¼. Hogs were mixed, topping at 11.60 cents. Cotton futures ended unchanged to up 10 cents a bale.

Higher on the Curb were American Cyanamid, Bell Aircraft, Aeronautical and Gulf Oil. Transfers here were around 83,000 shares against 111,000 yesterday.

N.A.M. Head Lauds Choice of Nelson

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—Walter D. Fuller, chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers, told the Advertising Club of New York today that President Roosevelt's selection of Donald Nelson as war production chief was the most important move since declaration of the war emergency.

"The President has selected a man without peer in the business world," Fuller declared.

"When the President writes into law (as he has indicated he will do)," Fuller added, "complete and uneguivocal authority to a single war production chief, he will have made the most important move since the declaration of the war emergency—and by this wise, courageous delegation of power, assured the entire Nation of fulfillment of our common aim to massacre the Axis by mass production."

Power Output Sets New Peak

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—Electric power production expanded more than seasonally expected in the week ended January 10 in another rebound from a holiday decline, the report of the Edison Electric Institute disclosed today.

Latest output of 3,480,344,000 kilowatt hours was 5.8 per cent more than 3,288,685,000 in the preceding week and 15.9 per cent ahead of 3,002,454,000 in the comparable 1941 week.

The advance carried the Associated Press power index to 154 per cent of the 1929-'30 average, a new 1941-'42 high.

American Airlines Sets Traffic Record

New York, Jan. 14 (AP).—Charles A. Rheinstrom, vice president in charge of traffic of American Airlines, Inc., said today the company was the first air transport line in the world to carry one million or more passangers in any one calendar year.

In 1941, Rheinstrom said, American Airlines carried 1,202,816 revenue passengers. This compared with 870,930 in 1940.

The Outlook

Factories Need Specific Instructions In Order to Produce First Things First

With American industry in khaki, the United States Government has become the one big customer.

In business, the customer is the boss, and by ordering one item and withholding purchases for others, he determines the fields of employment and the types of products that are produced.

Now that the initial tooling-up of the new armament industry has been completed, this same type of economic principle should begin to operate in the making of ships, planes, tanks and guns.

The initial spark for determining the specific items which industry should produce in 1942 for the Army, Navy and for lend-lease must come from the military high command, working in conjunction with the new unified leadership of the United Nations.

A concept of anti-Axis grand strategy will determine the specifications and quantities needed, and the sooner industry gets specific instructions the surer it is that it can make a reasonable response to the heavy load placed upon it.

My recent talks here with key executives in the armed services, in civilian advisory services and with industrialists lead me to conclude the Naval buying presents somewhat more complicated problems than Army purchases. In respect to the Army, as the number of the men under arms is increased, the needs for materiel can be multiplied accordingly.

But in respect to the Navy, the time lag is longer, and hence the need to condition the purchasing philsophy to the strategy contemplated by Admiral King and his associates. No leadership in wartime can make more than provisional plans, subject to modification in the event of surprise events in the course of the war.

Purchasing agents should be guided by what the high command is planning. The high command, in formulating its defensive and offensive strategy, must choose between long-term products, such as battleships, which take four years to build, and lighter equipment, which can become available for more immediate requirements.

Thus a functional approach will give industry in khaki a better opportunity to attune production to demand.

It will enable factories to put first things first and to concentrate on items most needed.

When the high command, in conference with associated nations, fully formulates its strategy and specifies the tools needed within a given time schedule, then the Army and Navy Munitions Board, in concert with the OPM can relate these needs to the expanding facilities of specialized war industry, on the one hand, and converted large and small general purpose plants, on the other. Out of this type of specific thinking will emerge the master blueprint, which will enable the United States to mobilize its full productive strength.

In the process numerous technological problems will inevitably arise. For example, if in the construction of ships, the hulls come from the shipways more rapidly than motive power is available, such a disequilibrium poses a nice question. Shall the hulls continue to be built as rapidly as possible, and moored on nearby rivers, or should such output be slowed down to keep tempo with the slower production of motive power?

Obviously, if possible, the production of motive power should be stepped up, but the capacity to keep all assembled items in a complicated product in balance represents perfection. In peacetime, some of our industries, notably automobiles, showed a high degree of industrial genius in keeping inventories of parts and accessories so perfectly balanced that the assembly lines were able to flow without interruption.

R. J. Reynolds Net Drops to $23,239,386

By the Associated Press

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. yesterday reported 1941 net earnings of $23,239,386, equal to $2.32 each on the combined ten million shares of common and Class "B" stocks outstanding. This compared with $25,548,424, or $2.55 on the combined stock, in 1940.

Net sales expanded to a new high record of $323,020,113 from $292,039,070 in the preceding year.

Federal and State taxes on income totaled $18,492,479, an increase of $7,598,756 over 1940.

Tire Reconditioners, Swamped With Work, Take Orders Now for Months in Advance

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Jan. 14.—If you are planning to have your automobile tires recapped or retreaded some time within the next couple of months you may as well take your place in line now. . . .

The rush for these tire reconditioning jobs has been so great since the ban on new tire sales that every capable tire rebuilding concern is working at capacity, many on a 24-hour-a-day basis, seven days a week . . . and the capacity is not sufficient to meet the demand.

Because the work requires specialized equipment there is only meager possibility of an extension of facilities for recapping and retreading. There is no immediate prospect of a shortage of the materials needed.

The extent of the demand, however, is creating its own form of priorities. In many larger centers tire owners seeking a reconditioning job are being told to come back as much as a month from now; in other instances tires are being accepted with the stipulation that delivery cannot be hoped for in less than four weeks.

Obstacles to early deliveries include the fact that truck fleet operators, heretofore the principal customers of the tire rebuilders still are bringing in their big casings and expecting preferential treatment as "regular" customers. Another is that the load of work was dropped upon the shops with unexpected suddenness.

Prices, of course, have advanced noticeably in some instances as demand piled up.

As a general rule truck tires are found to be in better shape for rebuilding because their owners have used them with the expectation of having them retreaded or recapped; pasenger car tires on the other hand have been almost universally neglected by motorists who did not anticipate dire necessity. One result is that many tires now offered for reconditioning have weakened or broken down side walls and are not fit for satisfactory rejuvenation.

In some instances damaged sidewall sections can be repaired by vulcanizing in new sections, but ordinarily the cost involved makes this impracticable. The tire makers and rebuilders also point out that so-called "seconds" are not good risks for reconditioning.

The distinction between "retreading" and "recapping" is that in the former instance the casing surface is renewed from bead to bead; in the latter only the original tread is renewed. Recapping is the most common process now used. Each job requires the same amount of rubber, but recapping puts most of it on the tread or wearing surface.

In some instances the tire rebuilders are able to supply used casings where necessary, but these are becoming scarcer every day and the supply of rebuilt tires that were carried in stock before the new tire ban already has been exhausted.

Police Hold Two In Fake Scheme For Huge Bridge

Philadelphia, Jan. 14 (AP).—Two men are under arrest today on charges of attempting to promote investments in a fake scheme calling for construction of a new 30 million dollar bridge across the Delaware River that would be "vital to war effort."

Chief selling point, detectives said, was a boast that the projected span would support 60-ton tanks.

The men, Edmund Shenley Fritz, 72, of Pottstown, and George Carley, 60, of Philadelphia, were operating as "Federal Toll Bridges, Inc."

A desk, detectives said, was littered with plans for the bridge and what purported to be photostats of a letter to Secretary of War Stimson.

D. C. Rent Chief Warns Against 'Phony' Solicitors

Warnings to householders against unauthorized actions by "solicitors, investigators and inspectors" were issued yesterday by Rent Administrator Robert F. Cogswell.

He said numerous complaints had been received from persons who encountered these "phony" representatives of the Rent Control Administration.

"No one," said Cogswell, "has been sent from this office to make any investigations whatsoever."

Cogswell further warned homeowners that "these imposters may be thieves and by no means admit them." He also suggested that misrepresentations might be made by "busybodies" who want to find out what others are paying for certain types of accommodations.

ODD BODKINS — BY FRED FOX and CHASE CRAIG

TELL ME MORE ABOUT THIS SECRET WEAPON, SENATOR!
WELL, THE PLANS WERE TORN IN HALF, BODKINS NUMBERED THE HALVES, ONE AND TWO!
HOW IS THIS GRENADE-THROWER BUILT?
IT HAS A LONG METAL ARM THAT THROWS A GRENADE A MILE WHEN THE SPRING IS RELEASED!
SEE IF I HAVE THIS RIGHT? THE PART OF THE BLUEPRINT MARKED "ONE" GOES ON THE LEFT?
YES, THAT'S IT— BUT LET'S TALK ABOUT US!
I DON'T KNOW WHERE THE SENATOR IS, MR. BODKINS! ANYTHING WRONG?
YES, M'AM — THOSE PLANS! I PUT "ONE" WHERE "TWO" SHOULD BE, AND "TWO" WHERE "ONE" SHOULD BE!

OH-ER-COME IN, AD-ER-OF COURSE, YOU CAN SEE THE BABIES, BUT-ER-I'VE GOT COMPANY!
GO RIGHT AHEAD AND DON'T MIND ME, WINNIE! I'LL JUST SIT WITH THOSE GORGEOUS TWINS AND KEEP 'EM PACIFIED!
I'D BETTER RUN UPSTAIRS AND SEE HOW AD LIBB IS MAKING OUT WITH THE TWINS! I CAN'T UNDERSTAND HIS SUDDEN INTEREST IN THEM-- HE JUST SEEMS TO HAVE FALLEN MADLY IN LOVE WITH MY BABIES!
THAT'S UNDERSTANDABLE. I'VE FALLEN IN LOVE WITH THOSE BABIES MYSELF-

WHAT'S WRONG WITH HER OLD ONE?
HEY, BOSS— DID YOU ORDER A NEW DESK FOR JANE?
NOTHING— BUT THESE BIRDS ARE DELIVERING HER A NEW ONE!
WELL, SOME BODY DID— IT'S PAID FOR— AND I GOT ORDERS TO LEAVE IT AND PICK UP HER OLD ONE!
I DIDN'T ORDER THIS!
PRETTY FANCY— HOT STUFF, EH?
I BET SHE'S GOT A SECRET ADMIRER! SHUCKS!
PRETTY CLEVER, BORCH— I WAS WONDERING HOW WE'D EVER SEARCH HER DESK IN THAT NEWSPAPER OFFICE!
CLEVER? OF COURSE— WHY DO YOU THINK THEY MADE ME HEAD OF THE SECRET POLICE HERE?

SUPERMAN — Three's a Crowd — BY JERRY SIEGEL AND JOE SHUSTER

I CERTAINLY MADE MYSELF LOOK LIKE A HEEL THIS AFTERNOON WHEN I ORDERED LOIS BARRED FROM THE SET, BUT PERHAPS I CAN MAKE UP WITH HER TONIGHT.
LATER— AT LOIS' HOTEL....
OH— IT'S YOU!
I CAME TO APOLOGIZE, AND I HOPE YOU'LL BE KIND ENOUGH TO ACCOMPANY ME ON AN EVENING'S ENTERTAINMENT.
SORRY— THE LADY ALREADY HAS A DATE— WITH ME!
PAUL GRAFTON!
AND EVEN IF I WERE FREE THIS EVENING, YOU'RE THE LAST PERSON ON EARTH I'D CARE TO GO WITH!
WHERE'LL IT BE?

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

Grin and Bear It

By Lichty

"It's inspiring and heart-warming to have our entire membership volunteer for defense work—now we'll be able to get a wholesale price on our uniforms."

Listen!

with Glynn

When the Victorians coined the phrase, "a lady's place is in the home," even the most imaginative of them, probably, never thought of a lady like Dorothy Kilgallen.

For Dorothy's place is in the home all right. But she's gone the Victorians much more than one better. She's gone them millions better. She's in that somewhat numerous number of homes twice a week, thanks to a prevalent little gadget known as the radio.

And this is by way of calling attention to the fact that you millions will be hearing Miss Kilgallen over WJSV and the Columbia network at a different time starting tonight. That means that she'll be heard every Thursday from 6:15 to 6:30 p. m., instead of on Saturdays at 11:30 a. m., as you have been hearing her. She will continue her current Tuesday evening spot at the same time, 6:15 to 6:30.

The young newspaperwoman and columnist brought her popular "Voice of Broadway" syndicated column to radio last April. Her tales of the doings of the celebrated of the Broadway world have placed her well to the front of the chroniclers who go in for that sort of thing.

She started out being on the air just once a week—that was Saturday mornings. Then she was put on one evening a week, probably so that her Broadway friends could hear her. Now they can hear all.

Rail Rate Boost Of Temporary Nature Urged

St. Louis, Jan. 14 (AP).—Any increase in freight rates on coal that may be authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission should be only temporary, preferably with a definite expiration date, in the opinion of Karl D. Loos, spokesman for the National Coal Association.

Loos was one of the final witnesses before the commission as it wound up an eight-day hearing on the request of the Nation's railroads and water carriers for a general 10 per cent increase in freight and passenger rates.

Contract Bridge

With the many devices for reaching slams now in vogue, it is noteworthy that the Richmond open-pair championship three different pairs of master players bid today's hand to six hearts identically. No slam convention was used by the masters, who all elected simple, direct methods, disdaining the use of an immediate forcing bid.

Today's Hand

Opening lead: 2 ♠.

Sitting East and West respectively were Mrs. Ralph C. Young and Sidney Silodor, of Philadelphia; Peter Leventritt and Sam Rossant, and W. H. Woolworth and Mrs. Ralph W. Gordon, of Buffalo.

The play also was the same: each declarer made six-odd by immediately developing the club suit. In each case South opened the spade deuce, which was won on the board with the king. Mrs. Young, Leventritt and Woolworth each cashed the club ace and ruffled a club in the closed hand, catching the doubleton king in South.

Trumps were then drawn, declarer's losing diamonds discarded on dummy's clubs and East had to give up a trump trick to South's heart jack, making twelve tricks and the small slam.

Planning Body Opens January Session Today

With three-fourths of its agenda devoted to defense measures, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission will open its January meeting this morning in the new Interior Building.

Selection of sites for more wartime temporary buildings, location of new defense housing, revision of plans for the proposed South Capitol Street bridge—these are among the problems pertaining to the war effort which will confront the two-day session.

William T. Partridge, commission consultant, who attended a luncheon given by the league in New York last Thursday, is scheduled to report on the architects' sentiments.

At the December meeting, the planners named a special committee to work with the Public Buildings Administration on selection of sites for temporary buildings to be erected in and around Washington under a 25 million dollar appropriation. The committee will report its findings today.

Staff members also will make recommendations as to choice of land in the metropolitan area for 22,000 dwelling units which are to be built for defense workers.

On tomorrow's calendar are:

Action on a revised plan for the proposed stadium and sport center at the foot of East Capitol Street.

Consideration of recommendations for further land acquisitions in the George Washington Memorial Parkway project.

Study of an approach to the proposed South Capitol Street bridge to accommodate workers going to and from the new Federal office building under construction at Suitland, Md., which is scheduled for completion this year.
